With a history of rancor marking the Supreme Court for more than a decade, Chief Justice Robert Young Jr. and Justice Bridget McCormack said the court has worked in an extremely collegial fashion this year.

Meeting with reporters to discuss a new rule and order on translation services (see related story), the two even engaged in some clowning. After Ms. McCormack talked about how her first year on the court had been marked by "incredible collegiality," Mr. Young made a show of handing her a $10 bill. (She later returned it, and Mr. Young said he would need it for groceries.)

While it is Ms. McCormack's first year on the court, it is Mr. Young's 15th year, and he said it had been the best year of his tenure.

"We are respectful of each other's views," he said. "The court is willing to listen to each other."

In some cases, that listening to one another has meant that in some opinions the minority opinion has ended up becoming the majority opinion.

"We have worked very hard to put our past aside," Mr. Young said.

That past included years where opinions nearly smoked with fury expressed by the members for each other. The court has seen significant change in personnel in recent years as former Justice Elizabeth Weaver - who was outspoken in challenging court procedure - resigned in 2010. Former Justice Maura Corrigan - one of Ms. Weaver's targets, but also one who gave as good as she got - left in 2011 to become director of the Department of Human Services.

And in January, former Justice Diane Hathaway resigned before pleading guilty to federal fraud charges. She began serving a prison sentence this summer.

Mr. Young said this is a "wonderful court."

Every top court in every state should have "talented and learned lawyers," he said, and "I hope this is that court."

When one reporter said it was hard to imagine Mr. Young conducting a similar press conference with Ms. Hathaway, Mr. Young said, "You have a limited imagination."

Senate Passes Child Abduction Legislation

The Senate on Wednesday unanimously passed legislation that would help ensure children would not be abducted by their parents during divorce proceedings.

The bill, SB 325, would establish the Uniform Child Abduction Prevention Act, which is intended to prevent the abduction of children by establishing standards for determining whether a child is at risk for abduction by one of his or her parents.

"My legislation empowers judges to order abduction prevention measures in child custody when evidence of a credible risk of child abduction is established," said bill sponsor Sen. Rick Jones (R-Grand Ledge), in a statement.

If a court determines a credible risk exists that the child will be abducted, it may order provisions and measures to prevent such a thing from happening. Some warning signs of possible abductions could be a parent suddenly getting passports for children, threatening to abduct a child, undergoing a change in citizenship status and other high-risk factors, Mr. Jones said.

Accordingly, the provisions include travel restrictions, prohibiting the individual from removing the child from the state, or placing the child's name on the U.S. Department of State's Child Passport Issuance Alert Program.

Sen. Bruce Caswell (R-Hillsdale) supported the legislation, but warned his colleagues that extending judicial discretion too much could have unintended consequences down the line. The bill passed 37-0 as Senate Minority Leader Gretchen Whitmer (D-East Lansing) was absent from session.

Courser (Sort Of) Downplays Governor Talk

Speculation prompted by the Right Michigan blog's countdown clock for a Republican primary challenger to Governor Rick Snyder led tea party activist Todd Courser to scoff Wednesday at the idea it would be him.

"Right now there is a little buzz on a primary challenge to Governor Rick Snyder and some are predicting that I am the one that is going to announce at the Mackinac Leadership Conference," he said in an email he also posted to Facebook about the upcoming Republican Party event on Mackinac Island. "I will say that this is news to me."

But Mr. Courser also said: "I believe that at the very least we should not assume that any battle to attempt to unseat this governor is lost. It is imperative that we defend liberty and conservatism at any and all levels."

Mr. Courser urged primary challenges against those compromising the conservative Republican brand.

"But we also need to be more than passionate; we need to be strategic and realistic about where our efforts will have the most impact on the advancement of conservatism," he said. "I have and continue to explore every option available that will advance conservatism and unite the party around those principles. I believe that the Lord will lead and provide for whatever option he directs."

Audit Praises Prison Mental Health Services, Finds Some Problems

A performance audit of Mental Health Services in the Department of Corrections resulted in mostly positive reviews for the agency, but criticized it on some aspects of its documentation and meeting required timeframes for evaluations.

The audit concluded that most aspects of Mental Health Services operated effectively.

But it found the agency did not conduct all evaluations and assessments within required time frames and did not document all required evaluations and assessments. The audit cautioned that these problems undermine the ability of the agency to ensure it met prisoners' needs in a timely fashion.

Agency procedures require the completion of an evaluation from a qualified mental health professional and a comprehensive psychiatric evaluation within 14 days of a prisoner being referred to MHS. But auditors, which reviewed records for 90 prisoners, found that 11 percent of qualified mental health professional evaluations occurred from three to 17 days late and 25 percent of comprehensive psychiatric evaluations were three to 114 days late.

Among the documentation problems found among the 58 prisoners reviewed who transferred to a different MHS level of care were that MHS did not document that it conducted 12 percent of the required mental health evaluations, 4 percent of the required psychiatric evaluations and 25 percent of the required activity therapy assessments.

The audit also found that MHS did not document or update all required individual treatment plans within required time frames. Depending on the level of care, those procedures require the updating of an individual treatment plan between one day and 10 days of a prisoner's admission or transfer to a new level of care. In 13 percent of 90 instances, MHS did not document or update individual treatment plans for prisoners admitted or transferred to a different level of care with five coming six to 95 days late and two 11 to 69 days late.

In some cases, MHS did not properly document all required notes, reviews, evaluations and assessments in prisoners' mental health records to ensure mentally ill prisoners received all mental health services consistent with their individual treatment plans.

In 35 of 61 records where MHS recommended case management, MHS did not document 41 percent of the required case manager or progress notes.

MHS officials indicated in the audit that they agreed with all the recommendations and that they are taking steps to comply.

The audit was conducted from April through September 2012 and generally covered operations from October 1, 2009, through August 31, 2012.

Army Veteran Sues State For Denying Him 'INFIDEL' License Plate

A U.S. Army veteran from the Upper Peninsula who served in the Iraq war filed a lawsuit Wednesday in the U.S. District Court in Grand Rapids against the Department of State for denying his request for a personalized license plate saying "INFIDEL".

Sergeant Michael Matwyuk sought the plate as a way to show defiance toward insurgents who labeled him and other U.S. soldiers as infidels. But the department denied the plate under the provision in the Motor Vehicle Code allowing it to do so with requests "that might carry a connotation offensive to good taste and decency."

The American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan, filing the lawsuit on behalf of Mr. Matwyuk, said that policy violates the First and Fourteenth amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

"As American soldiers in Iraq, we were called 'infidels' on a daily basis. As a way to cope, we decided to take this word, meant to hurt and demean us, as our own," Mr. Matwyuk said in a statement distributed by the ACLU. "It's a point of pride and patriotism that many of us identify with, just as we would identify with the word 'soldier.' This license plate is simply an expression of my service as an Iraqi combat veteran."

Appeals Court: Law Barring Vehicular Death Instruction Unconstitutional

A divided panel of the Court of Appeals ruled Wednesday that a state law that prohibits a judge from instructing a jury on a lesser charge in vehicular death cases was unconstitutional.

The court, in People v. Jones (COA docket No. 312966) held the statute violated principles held since the 1840s that a jury may convict an individual of the crime charged or of a lesser included offense.

The decision, by Judge Amy Ronayne Krause and joined by Judge Douglas Shapiro, upheld a ruling by the Wayne Circuit Court to provide an instruction to the jury that Thabo Jones could be convicted of a moving violation that caused death.

Mr. Jones was charged with reckless driving that caused death, and the prosecutor appealed the circuit court action.

But the court held the law's requirement that an instruction on the lesser crime fails to take into consideration that there is no such limitation if a case is before a judge only or that a jury could still find a defendant guilty of the lesser crime.

The court also said the Legislature can draft a statute so narrowly that the elements of a crime could preclude a lesser offense. But that did not happen in this situation.

Dissenting, Judge Kirsten Frank Kelly pointed out that the requirement that a jury not be instructed in the lesser charge does not block the jury from deciding to convict on the basis of that lesser charge.

The Legislature may not establish procedural rules but alone has the power to establish substantive law, she said. And, she said, the law in question does not infringe on procedure or practice and therefore was properly adopted.

Snyder Names New Flint Emergency Manager, Darnell Earley

Saginaw City Manager Darnell Earley was named by Governor Rick Snyder to be the new emergency manager for Flint after manager Michael Brown resigned.

Mr. Brown will leave the post on October 31. In his resignation letter to Mr. Snyder, which he submitted last week, Mr. Brown cited the death of his brother as a reason to step aside now.

Mr. Snyder praised Mr. Brown, saying he provided calm leadership during a difficult time. During his tenure as emergency manager, the city was able to finish the 2012-13 fiscal year with a surplus.

Mr. Earley has been the Saginaw city manager for eight years. Before going to Saginaw, Mr. Earley was the Flint city administrator and briefly served as the city's temporary mayor in 2002.

Water filters available for MDHHS clients, all Flint residents beginning Tuesday

LANSING, Mich. – Free water filters will be available to current Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients and Flint residents at four locations beginning Tuesday, October 6, at 9 a.m. through a partnership between the MDHHS and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. Free National Sanitation Foundation certified water filters are being provided to Flint residents as part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area.

Current MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location to obtain a free, certified home water filter. Residents who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department offices located at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw in Flint. Staff will be onsite at all four locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

"Ensuring that families in the Flint area have access to resources that will help reduce the potential for lead exposure is our top priority," said Nick Lyon, director of the MDHHS. "I want to thank our partners who have mobilized to make water filters available – a point that highlights the importance of continued collaboration at the local, state and federal level as we move forward."

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active Family Independence Program (FIP), Food Assistance Program (FAP), Child Development and Care (CDC), State Disability Assistance (SDA), or Social Security Insurance (SSI) recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office to receive their filter free of charge. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their water bill to the GCCARD location.

Although blood lead levels throughout the city of Flint have remained steady, last week, MDHHS data was found to be consistent with a recent Hurley Children's Hospital study indicating increased blood lead levels in children residing in two Flint ZIP codes after a 2014 change in water source. While lead paint remains the number one cause of lead poisoning in Michigan, the recent data prompted MDHHS to take action to reduce potential lead exposures through water sources.

MDHHS is urging parents in Flint and throughout the state to do their part in preventing elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information about steps you can take now, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and available resources, visit www.michigang.gov/flintwater.

State offering extended, weekend hours for water filter distribution at Lippincott GCCARD

Nearly 5,000 NSF certified filters issued by MDHHS to Flint residents since Monday

LANSING, Mich. – Flint residents and Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients with a city of Flint water bill will now be able to take advantage of extended hours this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department 2727 Lippincott location. Extended hours will be offered at the Lippincott facility only, and will run until 7 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, and from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday. The other three locations will maintain 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. operating hours, Monday through Friday, for filter pick up.

Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive, reemphasized that the Brita SAFF-100 filters being distributed by the department and GCCARD do meet the NSF/ANSI 53 standards for drinking water treatment units.

“The Brita faucet filtration system that we are distributing to residents are National Sanitation Foundation certified to reduce lead in drinking water,” said Dr. Eden Wells. “When connected appropriately, these filters improve water quality by filtering out contaminates including lead, chlorine, benzene and other chemicals.”

Since Monday when MDHHS announced that free water filters would be distributed at four Flint locations, the state and GCCARD have partnered to issue approximately 5,000 free NSF certified water filters to residents that are on the city of Flint water system. The distribution of filters is part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area. These NSF certified water filters remove lead in the water administered through water taps in homes.

MDHHS clients and residents with a city of Flint water bill may take advantage of the extended hours at the Lippincott GCCARD. During the regular business hours, MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location; residents on Flint water who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the GCCARD offices at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw. Staff will be onsite at all four locations to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their city of Flint water bill to a GCCARD location.

MDHHS is urging all residents do their part to prevent elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information on prevention, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and resources, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

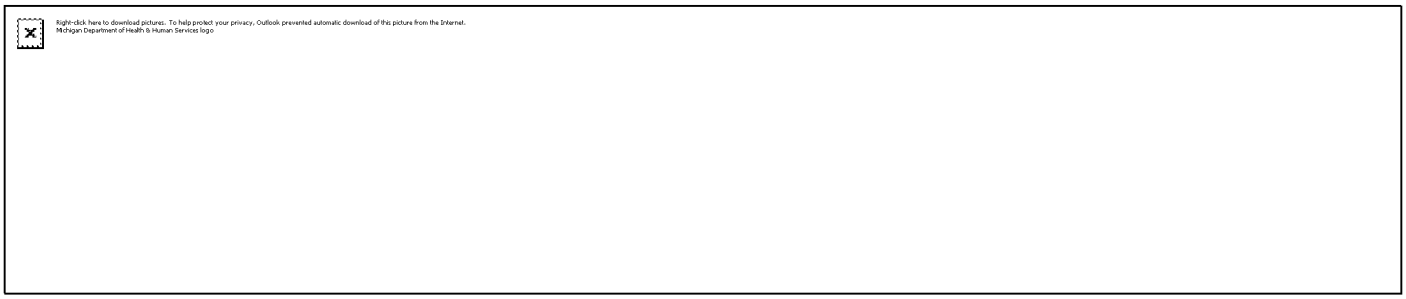
Subject: FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: MDHHS releases latest data outlining blood lead levels in Flint; Follow-up care, case management resources continue for families



Press Release

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: December 3, 2015

MDHHS releases latest data outlining blood lead levels in Flint

Follow-up care, case management resources continue for families

LANSING, Mich. – Preliminary data indicates that 30 of 1,361 adults and children tested in Flint since October 1 had elevated blood lead levels, according to a report issued today by the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services.

This marks the first summary report on lead testing called for in the state's action plan related to health concerns about Flint's water infrastructure.

"Our goal is to help families reduce their exposure to lead sources," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We have made progress in testing and identifying those with elevated blood lead levels, and the department will continue to work closely with the Genesee County Health Department to reach these families. We will remain diligent in our ongoing outreach and education efforts."

Information comes from tests administered citywide to 1,361 children and adults since October 1. Tests showed that 21 of 969 children age 17 or younger and 9 of 392 adults over the age 18 were identified with elevated blood lead levels.

The report covers test results reported to MDHHS since the state action plan was put in place Oct.

2. It includes the number of tests and number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter, and captures both capillary and venous blood tests that have been reported to MDHHS since the beginning of October. People who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Five micrograms per deciliter is the level that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention considers elevated and triggers health care professional follow up with families.

The full report is posted online at www.michigan.gov/flintwater and will be updated as more data becomes available.

When reviewing historical trend data, the risk of lead exposure is highest during the third quarter of each year – July through September. Seasonal variation is the result of a number of factors including increased exposure to lead in dust and soil in the summer months.

In the third quarter of 2010, 8.3 percent of Flint children 6 and under showed elevated blood lead levels. The figure gradually decreased to 4.1 percent in the third quarter of 2013. During the same months in 2014, the figure increased to 7.5 percent and decreased to 6.4 percent in the third quarter of 2015.

Last month, MDHHS collaborated with the county health department and local partners to distribute educational resources and informational letters to Flint parents regarding lead testing. The state is providing funding for GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level has been detected. During these follow-up visits, nurses coordinate with environmental health investigators to meet with families in their homes to identify lead exposures, address questions and provide water filters. People can be exposed to lead from paint, soil, plumbing and other sources.

MDHHS continues to provide free water filters and replacement cartridges to Flint residents at four locations, including the MDHHS Flint offices and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Split over guns and prison reform, voters unite over water quality

LANSING, Mich. -- In the wake of the Flint water crisis, how concerned are voters about the safety of the water in their home? Enough to agree with each other, according to the latest Michigan's Pulse poll, a partnership of Public Sector Consultants and Michigan Radio.

From November 3 to November 5, 2015, Denno Research surveyed 600 likely voters on a range of topics, including water quality, concealed pistols, prison reform and autonomous vehicles. Beyond increased attention to urban water quality, these highly politicized topics yielded little agreement, with stark differences by political affiliation, race and age.

Water Safety

Ninety-one percent of respondents agree that the State of Michigan should examine the water systems in densely populated areas for signs of failing infrastructure. The vast majority (84 percent) also feel that water should be tested in Michigan's K-12 school buildings at least once a year.

About half of respondents (46 percent) are concerned about the safety of their water, but there are clear differences by subgroups:

- African-American voters (71 percent) are more concerned than white voters (40 percent).
- Democrats (52 percent) are more concerned than Republicans (36 percent).
- Wayne County respondents (61 percent) have higher concerns than those in other parts of the state, with 81 percent of voters in Detroit expressing concern about the safety of their water.

Concealed Pistols and Prison Reform

With the recent coverage of high-profile shootings on college and K-12 school campuses, allowing concealed pistols in these places has become a major topic for the upcoming presidential election. Under state law, those licensed to carry concealed pistols still cannot carry their weapons at schools; at day care centers, sports arenas or stadiums; at entertainment facilities that seat 2,500 or more; at bars, churches, hospitals, casinos and dormitories or classrooms of colleges or universities.

About half of voters (46 percent) support lifting the ban in some or all of these places, while (49 percent) oppose that.

- Of the Republicans polled, 65 percent support lifting the ban in some or all of these places, compared to Democrats, at 33 percent.

Less than half of respondents (40 percent) support lifting the ban in day care centers, K-12 schools and college dormitories and classrooms, with a little over half (55 percent) opposed.

- Almost half of all men polled (47 percent) and almost two-thirds of Republicans polled (62 percent) support lifting the ban; while women (34 percent), Democrats (27 percent) and Independents (34 percent) oppose doing so.

Slightly more than half of Michigan voters (53 percent) support presumptive parole, legislation recently passed by the Michigan House that automatically paroles low-risk felons after they serve their minimum sentence.

- African-Americans (74 percent) and Democrats (67 percent) are more supportive than whites (49 percent) and Republicans (40 percent).

Finally, we asked voters if they think offenders who were convicted of violent crimes under the age of 18 should be eligible for parole. The jury is clearly still out on this issue, with opinion split between yes (41 percent) and no (39 percent), with nearly a quarter (20 percent) saying they don't know or are unsure.

Robot Cars

Autonomous vehicles are currently being developed in Michigan, and some (like the Google Self-Driving Car) are already being road tested in other states. We wondered if people were comfortable with the idea of robots driving cars on Michigan's roads, and more to the point, if people thought they would make our roads safer.

- A solid majority (68 percent) are not comfortable with the idea of having driverless cars on Michigan's roads, with half (51 percent) saying they were very uncomfortable.
- A little more than half of voters (56 percent) feel that driverless cars would be more dangerous than the humans currently driving on Michigan's roads.

Despite this opposition, voters accept that this will be how people get around in the near future. Most respondents (57 percent) think that driverless cars will be common in Michigan sometime in the next five to 20 years. That buys humanity at least a few years to figure out how to prevent the cyborg invasion that is sure to follow.

Legislative Reform

In a previous PSC poll after the failure of Proposal 1, road funding was identified as a critical priority, with voters saying the legislature should work over the summer to resolve the issue. While the poll did not specifically address the merits of the $1.2 billion package recently signed by Gov.

Rick Snyder, voters clearly do not approve of the way this issue was handled, with the vast majority rating the legislature as bad (21 percent) or terrible (58 percent).

We followed this question with a couple of options on how to improve the effectiveness of the Michigan Legislature. All of the ideas appear to have similar appeal, which seems to indicate that voters are ready for a change -- even if they don't know exactly what the change should look like:

- Stricter campaign finance and/or ethics laws (25 percent)
- Switch to a part-time legislature (21 percent)
- Do nothing because legislators can always be voted out of office if they are doing a poor job (21 percent)
- Change the length of term limits by allowing members to serve up to 12 years in either chamber (18 percent)
- Don't know/unsure (15 percent)

Goodbye Halloween

On the heels of the Halloween season, we wondered what had scared voters the most so far in 2015. While a quarter (25 percent) were not willing to express their fears out loud, those that did were scared most by the presidential debates (42 percent), followed by the Detroit Lions (22 percent).

About the Survey

Michigan Radio, an NPR News Station and the state's most listened-to public radio service, and Public Sector Consultants (PSC), the state's premier nonpartisan think tank, are partnering on a yearlong initiative studying Michiganders' attitudes toward policy issues affecting their lives in a series called Michigan's Pulse. Michigan's Pulse will release quarterly in weeklong segments on Michigan Radio's Stateside with Cynthia Canty with in-depth analysis by PSC researchers and other thought leaders.

The Michigan Radio/PSC survey of the Michigan electorate was conducted by Lansing-based Denno Research. Six-hundred respondents, 450 by landline and 150 by cell phone, in the state of Michigan were surveyed from November 3 to 5, 2015, with a margin of error of plus/minus 4 percent. A screen was employed to include only those participants who said they would vote, either at the polls or by absentee ballot, in the November 2016 general election.

Full survey results are available here.

Public Sector Consultants is Michigan's most respected, connected, and dedicated research and program management firm, with specialties in governance and regulation, health care, education, energy, and environmental policy. PSC is committed to providing objective research and sound solutions to the public and private sector.

Michigan Radio is an NPR News Station, and the state's most listened-to public radio service, attracting more than 500,000 listeners each week across Michigan. Licensed to the University of Michigan, Michigan Radio broadcasts at 91.7 FM in southeastern Michigan, 91.1 FM in Flint, and 104.1 in western Michigan, and is available online at michiganradio.org.

MDHHS releases latest round of Flint blood lead level data

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its newest summary report on lead testing in Flint. According to preliminary data, 39 of 1,836 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"As testing continues, our focus remains on helping families reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We are working closely with the Genesee County Health Department to provide information and offer tools in the community, and encourage families to explore the resources that are available to them."

Both capillary and venous blood tests are included in the report, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS is working closely with local partners to offer resources and distribute important lead testing and prevention information. Additional state funding has allowed for Genesee County Health Department (GCHD) nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected. These families can also choose to have the nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources.

To support these efforts, the state is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities on enhanced screening and testing. In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS has recommended blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are still available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Updated summary report on Flint blood lead level data now available

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its bi-weekly summary report on lead testing in Flint. Preliminary data indicate that 43 of 2,182 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"In partnership with the Genesee County Health Department, we are working to engage and provide resources to residents to reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "Case management and home lead analysis are available for families in which an elevated blood lead level has been detected."

The first MDHHS summary report on blood lead levels in Flint was issued Dec. 3, 2015. Updated reports are posted on a bi-weekly basis on the www.michigan.gov/flintwater website. After refining our methods to identify age, some people are now counted in a different age group than on previous reports. The total counts for each year have not changed.

The report includes both capillary and venous blood tests, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS, together with the Genesee County Health Department (GCHD), is working with local partners to distribute educational information around lead testing and prevention. Supplemental state dollars are funding GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected.

Families with an elevated blood lead level can also choose to have a nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to help identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources. Families with questions about their blood lead levels or test results are also encouraged to contact their primary care physician or local health department.

In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities to recommend blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Health care repeal vote to open a political year in Congress

It's been like a long-delayed New Year's resolution for Republicans, but 2016 will finally be the year when they put legislation on President Barack Obama's desk repealing his health care law.

2016 election uncertainty clouds health care business climate

Health care stakeholders should brace for a year of business uncertainty in 2016 — an election year where the Senate and White House are up for grabs with Democrats and Republicans offering competing visions of the government's role in health care.

Volume #54, Report #188 -- Tuesday, September 22, 2015

Medical Marijuana Bills Make Their Way To House Floor

After months of negotiations, the House Judiciary Committee on Tuesday reported a package of bills creating a regulatory structure for medical marijuana provisioning centers and permitting the use of non-smokeable forms of the drug.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB420901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB421001" } were introduced in February, and similar bills were overwhelmingly approved by the House last term, though they died in the Senate during lame-duck.

During the first nine months of this term, stakeholders attempted to hash out their differences in a way they didn't last year. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284701&locid=1" } (R-Nashville), sponsor of HB 4209, said this time around he wanted to be sure to include law enforcement.

"This is something I've been working on longer than my bachelor's degree," he told the committee. "It's been essentially over four years, and it's been an education. Now it's better than it's ever been."

HB 4209 creates the regulatory structure for medical marijuana provisioning centers. The bill allows for local governments to decide if they are appropriate for their community. The bill includes an 8 percent excise tax and the 6 percent sales tax to be charged on marijuana.

The bill also requires the use of a secure transport service to transport the marijuana.

It cleared the committee 8-2 with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=310601&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=274601&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) voting no.

Mr. Irwin expressed concerns about the taxes charged on the drug. He said there is a philosophical difference on whether a person believes higher taxes and more regulations will lead to more or less black market activity.

"When we add all these layers of regulations, we are increasing the cost in the legal market, thereby giving a huge advantage to the illegal market," he said. "If we grab too tightly, this may squeeze through our fingers, and we end up with less control rather than more control."

The bill also creates five license types: growers, processors, testing labs, secure transporters and dispensaries. A five-member board is also created under the bill to handle the licensing.

The revenue collected through the taxes would be split up, with 27.5 percent going to local governments with provisioning centers; 27.5 percent to counties with provisioning centers; 5 percent to sheriffs in the counties with provisioning centers; and 40 percent to the state.

The legislation would also use a seed-to-sale tracking system to help ensure medical marijuana does not make its way to the black market. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB482701" } , which also cleared the committee, creates the program.

HB 4210 allows the use of topical and edible forms of the drug. The bill cleared committee 10-1 with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=291201&locid=1" } (R-Mancelona) voting no.

Patient advocates were not pleased with the proposal taxing the drug.

"No medicine should be taxed," said Matthew Abel with Cannabis Counsel.

He also said the bill creates a new bureaucracy, as more state workers will need to be hired: 113 licensing enforcement personnel; 34 state police personnel and four lawyers at the Department of the Attorney General.

"The latest versions of HB 4209 and HB 4827 have not been well thought-out," Mr. Abel said. "They clearly will cause numerous unintended consequences, while failing at their intended purpose, to move toward a regulated system and away from the illegal market."

Sharp Disagreement As Committee Discusses Bill To Criminalize Abortion Coercion

Coercing a woman into having an abortion would become a crime under legislation discussed Tuesday in the House Criminal Justice Committee.

The bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB478701" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB483001" }) generated several strong disagreements between those who oppose abortion and those who support the legal right to an abortion. No vote was taken, and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=266001&locid=1" } (R-Plymouth), the committee chair, said the committee would return to the legislation at an upcoming meeting.

The committee's three Democrats - { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=367901&locid=1" } of Bridgeport, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=94401&locid=1" } of Muskegon and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=358301&locid=1" } of Detroit - each took turns peppering the bill sponsors and activists supporting the bills about why the legislation is necessary.

Supporters of the bills said they had considerable anecdotal reports of women coerced into an abortion - by their parents, husband or boyfriend, and others - and the state should make such actions illegal.

"It is an all-too-common experience," said Genevieve Marnon of Right to Life of Michigan.

But the Democratic lawmakers questioned why the bills do not criminalize the coercing of a woman into keeping her baby.

"The real problem is what those of us here are questioning which is people being coerced into carrying a pregnancy," Ms. Hovey-Wright said.

Ms. Marnon said any form of coercion is wrong, but the issue raised by Ms. Hovey-Wright belongs in a different statute and thus not in the bills before the committee. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=317301&locid=1" } (R-Troy) mocked the Democratic criticism, asking sarcastically whether he should oppose the bill because it fails to criminalize every illegal act.

But Democrats and an official with the American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan questioned why the bill was even necessary, saying that the state's informed consent law already requires a woman's consent to an abortion without coercion and that other statutes would make coercion into having an abortion illegal.

"These kinds of laws are part of a political campaign that women who seek abortions do so because they are confused and coerced," said Shelli Weisberg of the ACLU of Michigan.

But Ms. Marnon said a specific statute will help prevent the coercing of women into an abortion.

"Women will know it's a crime and can tell whoever is coercing her to stop because it's illegal," she said.

Courser, Gamrat, Dillon Replaced On House Committees

House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } announced new committee assignments to replace the recently departed former representatives Cindy Gamrat, who was expelled, and Todd Courser and Brandon Dillon, who both resigned.

Mr. Courser (R-Silverwood) resigned before he could be expelled like Ms. Gamrat (R-Plainwell). Mr. Dillon (D-Grand Rapids) resigned to take the post as chair of the Michigan Democratic Party.

With Mr. Dillon's departure, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=318601&locid=1" } (D-Clio) returned to the House Appropriations Committee. The term started with drama surrounding Ms. Faris' appointment as minority vice chair, and she was later removed from the committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=371701&locid=1" } (R-Holland) will take Ms. Gamrat's former spot on Appropriations.

"Todd Courser and Cindy Gamrat have done enough damage to the House and to the legislative process," Mr. Cotter said in a statement. "We cannot allow their absence to get in the way of the important work these committees are doing to reform state government and improve the lives of Michigan's residents. Each of these representatives has agreed to take on the extra work necessary to make sure we can all move forward and continue Michigan's comeback."

Ms. Faris will also join the Joint Capital Outlay Subcommittee and the Transportation Subcommittee.

Mr. Cotter also created a new House Appropriations Subcommittee to reflect the merged community health and human services departments as the Health and Human Services Subcommittee.

The 15-member committee is essentially a merger of the two separate subcommittees. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=263501&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) was named as minority vice chair instead of Rep. Brian Banks (D-Detroit), who served as the MVC of the separate Human Service Subcommittee.

Mr. Dillon was minority vice chair of the Community Health Subcommittee.

Katie Carey, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268401&locid=1" } (D-Auburn Hills), said it was disappointing Mr. Cotter did not consult with Mr. Greimel before choosing the minority vice chair of the new committee.

However, she said, they are pleased with the other Democratic appointments.

On Mr. Courser's former committees, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284201&locid=1" } (R-Alto) will return to the Education Committee as his replacement. Ms. Lyons chaired the committee during the last two terms.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=219601&locid=1" } (R-Montague) will sit on the Agriculture Committee; Mr. Afendoulis on the Criminal Justice Committee; { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=283401&locid=1" } (R-Owosso) on the Military and Veterans Affairs Committee; and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=353601&locid=1" } (R-Clarkston) on the Regulatory Reform Committee.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=96801&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) will replace Ms. Faris on the Financial Liability Reform Committee and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=312601&locid=1" } (D-Westland) will replace her on Military and Veterans Affairs.

On Appropriations subcommittees, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=358201&locid=1" } (R-Sturgis) will now sit on Education; Mr. Poleski will take over as chair of Judiciary (replacing Mr. VerHeulen); Ms. Cox will sit on Licensing and Regulatory Reform; Mr. Canfield on the Military and Veterans Affairs subcommittee; and Mr. Poleski on Natural Resources.

Judiciary Clears Way For Wrongful Imprisonment Compensation

The state would compensate those who had been wrongfully imprisoned for a crime they did not commit under legislation reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday.

Ledge), back in May. Michigan is one of a minority of states that does not compensate nor offer exit services for persons who have been wrongfully imprisoned.

"Exonerees face tremendous difficulties re-integrating into society," Mr. Bieda said, noting that 30 other states and the federal government offer compensation for those who can prove they were wrongfully imprisoned. "It is our intent to help these individuals re-establish their lives."

The bills would be limited in scope to a person who could prove he or she was convicted and served time in a Michigan prison, and that all the convictions resulting in imprisonment were overturned because of new evidence of actual innocence.

After the convictions are overturned, the charges were dismissed, or an individual is acquitted at retrial and the individual proves in the Court of Claims complete innocence of all of the offenses that landed them in prison, they too could be eligible for compensation.

And a court that determined a plaintiff had been wrongfully convicted and imprisoned must expunge those records from a person's criminal history.

Compensation would be $60,000 per year for the period of incarceration; economic damages, including lost wages and other expenses; reasonable attorney fees; and reimbursement of any amount collected from the plaintiff by the state under the State Correctional Facility Reimbursement Act. If a person chooses to collect this money, it would bar them from any further action against the state based on the same matter. Such settlements would be paid from the General Fund.

The Senate Fiscal Agency estimated the cost to the state to be significant but indeterminate. The National Registry of Exonerations maintained by the University of Michigan Law School indicates that 60 exonerations have occurred in Michigan to date. At a minimum, assuming all 60 individuals met the eligibility criteria and receive only the yearly compensation amount, the first year of payments would total $3.6 million. The average number of years of wrongful imprisonment per exoneration is 8.05, the analysis said.

If all payment were made under the conditions in the NRE's database, the total minimum costs would be about $29 million General Fund, the SFA determined, based on fixed amounts taken from the bill. But there are other variables that could increase the figure on a per-case basis.

"Although I'm not in jail anymore, the effects of my wrongful conviction continue to ruin my life," said Julie Baumer, who was wrongfully convicted a decade ago of Shaken Baby Syndrome. She spent four-and-a-half years in jail.

A similar bill, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB453601" } , was reported from the House Criminal Justice Committee in mid-June but has not seen action on the floor yet. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=358301&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), sponsor of that bill, spoke in support of Mr. Bieda's bill at the committee.

"There are significant costs that come with adjusting back into society. Exonerees are given no services to help with this," she said. "I believe when an individual is proven innocent ... the least they should expect is a state that wants to help make it right."

The bill was reported with unanimous approval.

UPDATING OLD STATUTES: The committee also reported a slew of House bills updating outdated language in statute despite some concern by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) about what repealing at least some of those statutes said about our citizens morally.

Among them was { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB424801" } , which repeals provisions of law related to playing of the National Anthem, use of indecent language in front of women and children, and improper disposal of refrigerators. It was reported unanimously.

Also reported unanimously was { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB425001" } , which repeals prohibitions against certain endurance contests, as well as { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB450101" } , which revises sentencing guidelines to reflect certain repealed crimes.

The committee also voted to eliminate references to "human monstrosity" in law via { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB470901" } , as well as { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB471001" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB471101" } related to modifying the penalty for violators related to camping on state-owned lands. Currently, it is a misdemeanor to do so, but the bills would change it to a civil infraction. HB 4711 also repeals laws dealing with sentencing a person to solitary confinement and/or hard labor; assembling or rebuilding a battery from used battery parts, for sale, without labeling it as rebuilt; and keeping a person sentenced to hard labor constantly employed.

All were reported with unanimous approval and no changes.

Jones Takes Another Shot At Regulating Nudity At Bars

A bill prohibiting nudity at bars saw more testimony in the Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday as it was reported from the committee for a second time since May.

"This will keep status quo in Michigan," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge), chair of the committee and sponsor of { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB30201" }, in defending his bill for a second time in his committee.

Mr. Jones' bill was introduced in late April, saw a committee hearing and S-1 substitute adopted about two weeks later when the bill was reported from his own committee, making this the second time the bill has come up for a hearing in Judiciary.

The last time the bill was up in committee, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) raised a concern about a potential loophole that would seem to allow nudity in certain establishments if it was considered a form of art, and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=43601&locid=1" } (D-Warren) was concerned about an amendment that seemed to put the bill above potential court challenges.

And Mr. Bieda's concern was precisely the reason for a second hearing. Officials with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" }'s office gave a presentation about why that section was necessary and appropriate.

"One of the things we were concerned with (in dealing with a case on nudity in a bar) ... was that the Sixth Circuit found we didn't have any rationale or reasons to back up rules that prohibit full nudity," said Don McGehee, division chief of the Alcohol and Gambling Enforcement division. He said the court insisted, in { HYPERLINK "http://www.ca6.uscourts.gov/opinions.pdf/07a0351p-06.pdf" \t "blank" }, that the state must have evidence of secondary effects such as crime, plight, drug trafficking, and so forth, and that full nudity and sex acts are "expressive conduct" protected by the First Amendment.

But there are many cases that have found that negative secondary effects exist in or near adult-oriented entertainment venues.

"This bill does not try to ban all nudity," Mr. McGehee said, noting that certain venues can have topless entertainers if they have a special permit. "This bill would be to ban, by state law, full nudity in any entertainment establishment or any (liquor) licensed premises on the premises."

He provided to the committee studies and cases that prove negative secondary effects and thus legitimize the section Mr. Bieda had previously raised concerns about.

But Mr. Bieda's concerns were not entirely alleviated. He noted how the language included a "broad range of things that could be a secondary problem with a regular bar or night club, and I just wonder if this couldn't be cut down a little bit," he said.

One example Mr. Bieda pointed to was that litter was considered to be a negative secondary effect, and while Mr. McGehee agreed that he probably wouldn't consider such a thing a "material" negative secondary effect, some believe it ought to be, Mr. McGehee said. But Mr. Bieda expressed concerns that such language could have an effect on something as innocent as a restaurant.

"I think that language could be a lot tighter," Mr. Bieda said.

Nonetheless, the committee gave unanimous support to send SB 302 back to the full Senate, but Mr. Bieda hoped to continue work with Mr. Jones on that language.

House Panel Considers Updates To 'Kevin's Law'

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151301&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=325701&locid=1" } want to update "Kevin's Law," passed in 2004 to reduce the incarceration rates of those with mental illnesses, as it has been found to be ineffective.

Mr. Calley spoke to the House Health Policy Committee on Tuesday and said under current law, a crisis needed to occur before intervention could happen. He said communities around the state were confused by the complexity of "Kevin's Law" and it hasn't been utilized much.

The law outlines the assisted outpatient treatment program in the state.

Under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB467401" } , sponsored by Mr. Leonard (R-DeWitt Township), a family member or friend would be allowed to petition the court and allow judges to order outpatient treatment for those who have had their mental illness confirmed by a physician, all without a crime being committed.

"When something bad happens, either to a person with a mental health issue or when something happens tragically perpetrated by a person with a mental health issue, usually there is a long trail of evidence that preceded that action, warning signs that could have been picked up on," Mr. Calley said.

He said those warning signs often are noticed, but without the ability to intervene sooner, there aren't a lot of options.

By contrast, Mr. Calley said HB 4674 would allow earlier intervention and help create a more successful release from hospitalization. He also noted due process rights are not affected by the bill.

And Mr. Leonard said the things that were supposed to happen under "Kevin's Law" simply have not happened.

"We are trying to revamp 'Kevin's Law,' we are trying to fill those gaps that are in the law and get people the treatment they need before they hurt themselves or hurt somebody else," Mr. Leonard said.

He also said the bill will provide long-term savings within the Department of Corrections.

Former Judge Milton Mack, who is now serving as the state court administrator, told the committee families have been seeking help for their loved ones with mental health issues for a long time but are not always able to get it.

"This bill will finally unlock the promise of 'Kevin's Law' and make timely assisted outpatient treatment readily available to many," he said. "Our mental health system fails many in a crucial point of time in their lives where timely intervention can mean the difference between recovery and maintaining self-determination or spinning downward into the cycle of poverty, homelessness and incarceration."

Mark Reinstein with the Mental Health Association of Michigan also said the current law is utilized little in the state.

He said the five most significant changes under the proposed bill are

- Setting a timeframe for when hearings must be held;
- Setting a clear two-exam requirement, with at least one from a psychiatrist;
- Removing that a person must be non-compliant with recommended mental health treatment from the list of eligibility criteria;
- Inserting the same prosecutorial responsibility for assisted outpatient treatment as other court-ordered mental health treatments (currently the local prosecutor does not need to be involved); and
- Simplifying the process of petitioning and certifying that someone may require court-ordered care.

The committee did not act on the bill.

Hunter Response Could Determine CWD Control

States' abilities to control chronic wasting disease have depended largely on aggressive efforts to reduce deer populations in affected areas, and it was unclear yet how open hunters will be able to aid in those efforts, Department of Natural Resources wildlife veterinary specialist Dan O'Brien told the House Natural Resources Committee on Tuesday.

"I've been amazed at the cooperation we've gotten over the summer," Mr. O'Brien said of land owners in the current affected area. "People have concerns, but by and large they were very supportive."

He said U.S. Department of Agriculture sharpshooters have taken some deer from local public lands, and a number of private land owners in the area have allowed USDA on their lands or have taken out disease control permits to take deer themselves.

"Now we're transitioning into hunting season and we'll have to see how the hunters accept things," he said.

The fear, particularly in the long term, is that hunters will stay home, Mr. O'Brien said.

The prion-based disease destroys brain tissue in deer, elk and moose, over time slowing their behavior and eventually killing them.

In as little as 20 years, the disease can spread through the deer herd.

"When that happens, hunters are going to stop hunting because they don't want to harvest sick deer," he said. "The entire economy and tradition of hunting is also lost."

The DNR would also lose one of its key methods for controlling the deer population, he said.

Mr. O'Brien said New York had been able to eradicate the disease by aggressively removing deer from areas where the infection was found. Wyoming, in contrast, had little resources for the control effort and so has seen its deer populations plummet.

Wyoming is also, though, seeing a shift to deer that can withstand the disease longer and so are able to reproduce before succumbing.

Mr. O'Brien said there is no evidence so far that the disease can be spread to non-cervids. Officials in Colorado and Wyoming, where the disease first appeared, tested spread from deer to cattle with captive infected herds and found no transmission.

Scientists have been testing for the past 10 years and have also found no evidence that the disease can be transmitted to humans, he said.

As part of the effort to track the disease, the DNR is requiring hunters in the area surrounding the three positive deer finds in Meridian Township (Ingham County) to bring their deer to DNR check stations where, in most cases, officials will take the head for testing. Mr. O'Brien said hunters would know within three days if their deer is negative for the disease and within a week if an initial positive test is confirmed.

The key struggle the department faces is the incubation time for the disease: between one year and five years before deer show symptoms.

"That means you have infected animals on the landscape that are infecting others but aren't showing symptoms, so we don't know how many there are or where they are," Mr. O'Brien said.

There are not confirmed tests for CWD, but he said scabies, a related disease in sheep, has been proven to remain viable in soil for more than 16 years.

The first positive deer, found in May, had likely been infected in 2013, he said. The other two deer had not yet been showing symptoms, so it was unclear when they were infected, he said. He said it was likely that a person brought the disease into the area but there was likely no way to confirm who or when.

The state has only found the three deer from the 677 deer tested so far, but Mr. O'Brien said the state would have to test thousands of deer before it will know the extent of the infection.

A key source of test animals has been road kill, and he said the DNR has extra staff dedicated to collecting the carcasses for testing.

While new tests are being developed, Mr. O'Brien said there are currently no approved tests for identifying the disease from tissue of living animals, though he said tests for tonsil and rectal biopsies are close. He said the tests are not currently sensitive enough to find the prions in bodily fluids.

In answer to questions from committee members, he said, for instance, it was possible that the doe urine used as an attractant for bucks could potentially be infected. But he also said the facilities that raise the deer to collect that product are well regulated by the USDA to ensure the deer there are not infected.

Mr. O'Brien said the department so far has been funding the testing and response with existing funds moved from other programs, but DNR legislative Liaison Trevor VanDyke said officials were currently considering whether to ask for additional funds in the 2016-17 budget.

"We're in the process of developing next fiscal year's budget and this is one of the things that will be considered," he said. "We'll look within first before we ask for any kind of General Fund or supplemental."

POACHING PENALTIES: The committee also reported a package of bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB24401" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB24501" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB24601" }) that create substantial increases in penalties for illegal taking or possession of elk, moose, bear, eagles and waterfowl. Using artificial light in taking that game would mean an extended period of license loss.

As reported, the bills would also create a misdemeanor penalty for using an illegal snare or cable restraint for trapping game.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=292001&locid=1" } (R-Vulcan) abstained on reporting SB 244, which creates the new penalties, and voted against the other two bills over objections to both about the amount of the penalties and including an illegal equipment provision in what is otherwise a poaching bill.

"I think that the fines are excessive and punitive and out of line," he said.

He said he would not object to the bills if the committee adopted his amendment that would make the illegal snares a crime only if they caught or killed a dog, which he said was the impetus behind the language.

The committee rejected his amendment.

Tours Of Capitol Dome Interior Banned For Safety Reasons

As exterior renovation of the Capitol nears completion, including a stunning restoration of the dome's exterior, the state's Capitol Commission on Tuesday adopted a policy that bans tours of the dome's interior.

The commission policy does allow for exceptions but acted on the advice of architects and out of fear that with the exterior restoration complete, requests for tours inside the narrow chambers between the skin of the dome and the rotunda would increase. The area is so narrow and packed with lighting and other fixtures that the Lansing Fire Department has actually developed a technical rescue protocol should anyone become ill or injured in the dome compartment.

The policy was one of many decisions the commission made, which included a new procedures manual for using public spaces and which calls for groups using the interior to, in some cases, pay a damage deposit or provide an insurance rider.

Commission chair and House Clerk Gary Randall said he was concerned that requests for tours of the interior of the dome would become more numerous.

But the interior is extremely narrow, and to go up through the interior requires going through a sliding door known as the guillotine and up a small ship's ladder. If someone were to have a heart-attack or get injured, it would be extremely difficult to get them out, he said.

But the commission did not approve, on a 4-1 vote, a total ban of access to the dome interior. Under the proposal passed, workers conducting maintenance would be allowed in the area and the commission could make exceptions for some situations to allow others into the dome's interior.

Senate Secretary Jeff Cobb, who said some legislators had expressed an interest in going into the dome's interior with visitors, voted against the proposal.

The commission also decided that Capitol employees who work on weekends will be paid time and one-half instead of accumulating compensatory time.

With the exterior renovations nearing completion, the continuing work on the Capitol will switch to the interior with a series of projects. The first will be completion of a project the state had to rush into action when it discovered during the summer the ceiling on the first floor corridor of the Senate's section was sagging and in danger of collapse.

Following that work, the state will focus on repairing and renovating the ceiling on the ground floor.

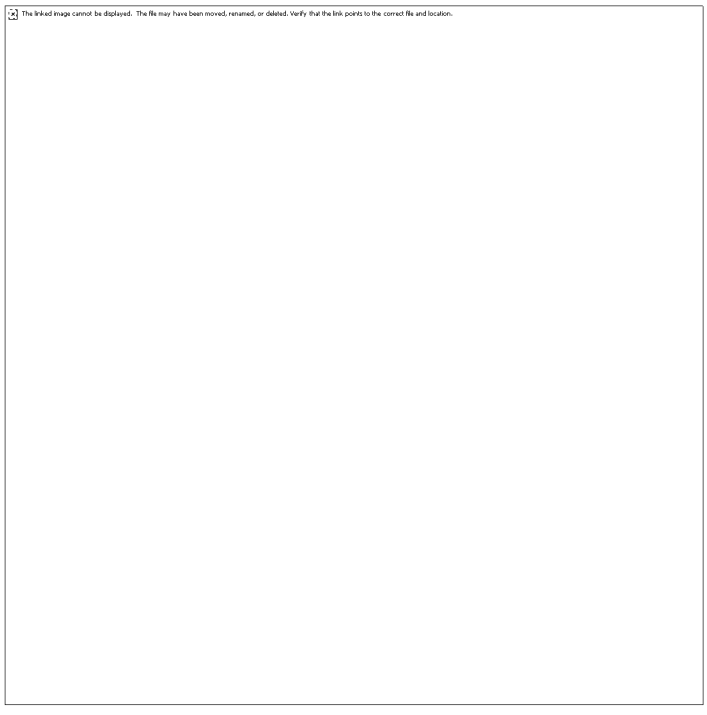
The state has some $500,000 worth of decorative painting to complete, but it is also having difficulty finding a decorative painter to hire. The craft is so specialized it is hard to lure experienced painters away from the companies they now work for, the commission said.

Commission members were also excited that next year, replicas of two large gas lamps that greeted the public from 1879 until the late 19th century will be returned to their place at the entrance of the walkway to the Capitol at the intersection of Michigan and Capitol Avenues.

In June 2016, the commission is planning to hold an event, open to the public, honoring the workers who handled the renovation, and showing off the lamps and redone garden beds.

MODILLIONS FOR SALE: As part of the exterior renovation more than 200 sandstone modillions from under the cornice surrounding the roofline of the Capitol were removed and replaced with new, hand-cut sandstone modillions, each weighing 47 pounds.

And as a result, the Capitol Commission decided to offer at least 100 of the old modillions, which were in place since the Capitol was completed in 1879, to the public. The rest were considered too badly deteriorated for public sale.



These old modillions from the Capitol will be among those sold to the public.

Modillions are decorative brackets used under a cornice, especially in buildings with Corinthian or Iconic architectural features. Modillions are seen in castles, cathedrals and other larger public buildings.

Commission member and former Capitol Facilities Director Kerry Chartkoff said it may be surprising how popular the modillions could be. When the initial renovation of the Capitol was completed in 1992, there were some original materials to the Capitol that couldn't be reused. Instead of just sending the goods to a landfill, the state decided to re-enact an auction of the materials that was held in 1879 - when materials not used were sold to the public.

Ms. Chartkoff said she was surprised at the interest and excitement the public had at that auction.

At a little more than 40 pounds, each modillion will probably have a specific decorative purpose for the people buying them.

The commission set a price of $100 minimum on the pieces. The first 50 will be sold for $100 each, with the buyers selected through a lottery. Persons interested in the modillions will be able to send a postcard to the Capitol facilities office to participate.

The remaining 50 will be sold through a mail auction, with bidders assigning a price in their letter to the state.

The commission will announce details of the lottery and auction at a later time.

And anyone not lucky enough to buy one of the modillions will get another chance: in 100 years when the new set of modillions will likely be replaced.

Committee Ups Penalties For Failing To Yield

Failing to yield to an approaching emergency vehicle, currently a civil infraction, would be increased to a misdemeanor, or a felony in the event that failing to yield caused injury or death to emergency personnel, under legislation reported from the Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday.

The bills, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB42101" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB42201" }, come in the wake of the death of a Lansing-area firefighter who prosecutors allege was deliberately run down while trying to collect money for charityt, as well as another incident in June in Holland in which four people - a patient, paramedic, and two firefighters - were hospitalized after an ambulance was involved in a crash with a pickup truck that failed to yield to the ambulance.

"When there is an emergency, every second counts," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=364301&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing), sponsor of SB 421, as he rattled off various statistics exemplifying just that.

Mr. Hertel said the bill would bring penalties in line with those associated with violating the state's move-over law. A person who failed to yield to an emergency vehicle and caused injury to a police officer, firefighter or other emergency response personnel in the immediate area of the approaching emergency vehicle would be guilty of a felony punishable by a maximum fine of $1,000 and/or up to two years' imprisonment.

If an individual failed to yield and caused death to a police officer, firefighter or other emergency response personnel, an individual would be charged with a felony punishable by a maximum fine of $7,500 and/or up to 15 years' imprisonment.

"We must ensure the punishment fits the crime," Mr. Hertel said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) raised an issue with the increased sentences.

"For somebody who was distracted, was thinking about the hectic schedule ahead, and in one case they have an injury and in another somebody dies on it, it's tough for me to put somebody away for that long of time considering the disruption to family (due to imprisonment)," Mr. Colbeck said.

But Mr. Hertel was unimpressed.

"I'm happy to continue conversations, but I think it's no less egregious not to move over than it is to not allow somebody with flashing lights to pass," he said.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge), chair of the committee and sponsor of SB 422, told Mr. Colbeck those are maximum penalties. Rarely, except in the most egregious of cases, does a court incur those penalties upon a violator of the law, he said.

The two bills, reported unanimously, are tie-barred and would take effect 90 days after their enactment.

GOOD SAMARITAN LAW: On a related note, the committee also reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB42701" }, which would include licensed emergency medical service providers in the Good Samaritan law. The law provides immunity from liability for certain health care professionals who provide care at the scene of an emergency, provide emergency care to someone who requires it as a result of a sports-related injury, or who responds to a life-threatening emergency in a hospital or other medical care facility when the person's actual hospital duty doesn't require a response.

Group: Lobbyists Spent $21M To Lobby State In First Half Of Year

In the first { HYPERLINK "http://www.mcfn.org/press.php?prId=228" \t "blank" }, lobbying firms spent $21 million on efforts to lobby legislators, the Michigan Campaign Finance Network said Tuesday.

That figure is up 1.4 percent from the same period in 2014, according to the MCFN.

Leading the way on spending was Governmental Consultant Services, Incorporated, at $947,832, followed by Karoub Associates, Kelley Cawthorne, RWC Advocacy, the Michigan Health and Hospital Association, Public Affairs Associates, Midwest Strategy Group, Muchmore Harrington Smalley Associates, Kandler Reed Khoury and Muchmore and the Michigan Credit Union League, the MCFN said.

MSF Approves $3M For Monroe Port

The Michigan Strategic Fund on Tuesday approved up to $3 million in repayable funds from its Investment Fund for the city of Monroe to make improvements to the Port of Monroe.

"These improvements will transform the Port of Monroe into a center of economic activity and a premier general cargo handling facility on the Great Lakes," MEDC { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=336401&locid=1" } said in a statement. "The project will promote further growth and investment in the Port and the region, and will lead to new jobs for Michigan residents."

The project expands trade routes and cargo opportunities, calls for dredging the River Raisin and a range of other improvements to increase accessibility to the port, the MEDC said. The impact is expected to cause fewer cargo delays and accommodate larger vessels with increased shipping capacity. The dramatic improvements in shipping efficiency are expected to generate a major economic impact to the Monroe region, it said.

"This is outstanding news for Monroe and the entire region," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276201&locid=1" } (R-Ida) said of the approval, in a statement. "The port is the industrial, commercial and recreational gateway to Monroe and is Michigan's only port on Lake Erie, yet its aging infrastructure has limited its accessibility.

The MSF also approved a Brownfield Work Plan worth about $3.6 million, the tax revenue generated as a result of the work plan to be used to repay the Investment Fund.

"As we consider policies to help promote job creation and economic development, it is important to remember the key role that our infrastructure plays in our economy," Mr. Zorn said. "These improvements will increase the accessibility and efficiency of the Port of Monroe - leading to fewer cargo delays, reduced wear and tear on regional roadways, and a substantial increase in the opportunity for new trade."

Located on the western edge of Lake Erie, the port provides direct access to all five of the Great Lakes and serves 17 states. The improvements will not only promote new cargo opportunities but will ship and receive materials for the port's existing tenants, including DTE Energy, Michigan Paving & Materials, Gerdau MACSTEEL, Ford Motor Company and Ventower, the MEDC noted.

Carhartt Expands, Valiant International Locates In Auburn Hills

Garment manufacturer Carhartt, founded in Detroit in 1889, will expand its headquarters in Dearborn to create 215 jobs, and auto systems maker Valiant International will expand its North American presence with the purchase of a facility in Auburn Hills after both received grants from the Michigan Strategic Fund.

Carhartt, best known for work clothes such as jackets, coats, overalls, coveralls, and more, will invest nearly $18.6 million and create 215 jobs, resulting in a $1.35 million Business Development Program performance-based grant from the MSF, the Michigan Economic Development Corporation announced Tuesday.

Michigan was chosen over competing sites on the East and West coasts where "top-tier talent related to the garment industry is more readily available," the MEDC noted in a statement.

The Strategic Fund also approved a $2.3 million grant for the purchase of an 187,000-square foot facility in Auburn Hills for Valiant International Inc. The project is expected to generate a private capital investment of $32.7 million and create 223 jobs over the next three years, the MEDC said.

"We proudly welcome Valiant to the global automotive capital," said MEDC { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=336401&locid=1" }, in a statement. "We appreciate their commitment to the Michigan economy, and know they'll find Michigan is the preeminent business environment to grow their endeavors in the automotive, aerospace, defense, and construction industries."

The company is based in Windsor, Ontario.

As part of the move to Auburn Hills, the company will consolidate its Troy-based sales operation and establish a skilled-trade training site for apprentices to learn machine operating, welding, robot programming and other metal-working skills, the MEDC said. It also plans to partner with local government, community stakeholders, colleges, trade schools and private businesses to attract high-wage workers. In fact, the skilled trades positions at the company are expected to pay on average $47 per hour, the MEDC noted.

NEAPCO DRIVELINES, LLC: The auto manufacturer plans to expand its driveline operations in van Buren Township and expand its headquarters in the metro Detroit area, investing $57.7 million and creating 167 jobs, the MEDC said. As a result, it was awarded a $1.5 million grant. Michigan was chosen over a competing site in Mexico.

REVITALIZATION PROGRAMS: HM Ventures Group 6, LLC, plans to renovate the historic Wurlitzer Building located on Broadway in the heart of downtown Detroit into a mixed-use boutique hotel to include 106 hotel rooms, a street level caf鍚 restaurant, retail and meeting space, and a rooftop bar. It will generate a total capital investment of nearly $22.3 million and create 48 permanent, full-time jobs, the MEDC said, resulting in a $3.5 million Community Revitalization Program loan. The MSF also approved $1.76 million in local and school tax capture to the Detroit Brownfield Redevelopment Authority to prepare the site for redevelopment.

In Grand Rapids, OHM, LLC plans to renovate the vacant, historic Rowe Building into a mixed-use building to include retail and residential space with sublevel parking. The projected is expected to serve as a catalyst in the revitalization of the north side of downtown, the MEDC said, investing nearly $26.9 million and creating 15 full-time jobs. It earned a $5.4 million revitalization loan. MSF also approved $2.58 million in local and school tax capture to the Grand Rapids Brownfield Redevelopment Authority for brownfield alleviation, site preparation and infrastructure improvements for the project.

MSF also approved the following:

- $2.5 million in funding to continue the Michigan Pre-Seed Fund 2.0 which provides loans or equity to early stage companies;

- Private activity bond authorizing resolution for Lutheran Homes of Michigan, Inc. to acquire and improve a 72-bed skilled nursing and rehabilitation facility known as Lutheran Woods located in Livonia;

- An extension of a business and tourism marketing and advertising services contract with McCann Erickson USA, Inc.; and

- An extension of a business and travel public relations services contract with Weber Shandwick.

Kildee Calls For Independent Test Of Flint Water

After meeting with state and federal environmental officials Monday, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=306801&locid=1" } said he is not confident that enough is being done to ensure Flint's water supply is safe and called for independent testing.

The city has been hit by a number of complaints in recent months, including tests showing unsafe levels of some chemicals as well as discoloration.

Mr. Kildee (D-Flint) said officials with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Environmental Quality and the city told him the water is being tested, but he said in a statement he was not convinced the testing was correct or sufficient.

"So far, I have been given no reason to have confidence in the current testing results," he said. "For example, it is unclear if homes sampled also took part in previous tests, which could have shown trends in water quality."

Mr. Kildee called for independent testing of the city's water that would include more homes.

"Flint residents deserve absolute transparency when it comes to the quality of their water," he said. "Additionally the city, DEQ and EPA must work together to ensure the immediate safety of Flint's drinking water, including any temporary relief until a long-term solution can be completed."

The Coalition for Clean Water echoed Mr. Kildee's call for additional testing and for providing residents with other sources of water until the system can be tested and repaired.

The group said its own testing showed corrosion problems in the city's water system.

"The Coalition demands the water source be switched back to Detroit water immediately as it is many times less corrosive than Flint River Water," the group said in a statement. "Even with the belated addition of corrosion control, extensive damage has been done to the pipeline infrastructure, and switching to Detroit water would be the best preparation for the eventual transition to KWA pipeline water while providing the best prospects of controlling lead and iron corrosion."

RIVER RAISIN: The DEQ announced Tuesday that the EPA had removed beneficial use impairment designations related to fish and wildlife populations and habitat from the River Raisin.

"Restoration of these beneficial uses means the fish and wildlife habitat in the River Raisin has vastly improved and can support healthy populations," DEQ officials said in a statement.

Longtime Prison Warden Barred From MDOC Property

The longtime warden of two Muskegon-area prisons has been stop-ordered and barred from entering Department of Corrections property, pending an investigation.

Mary Berghuis, the warden of the Earnest C. Brooks and West Shoreline Correctional facilities, was stop-ordered pending further investigation, said Corrections spokesperson Holly Kramer.

Ms. Kramer said she could not release any details about why the department stop-ordered Ms. Berghuis, the warden of the Brooks facility for 15 years and a longtime department employee before becoming warden, because the situation remains the subject of an internal investigation.

Shane Jackson, the deputy warden at the Muskegon Correctional Facility, was named acting warden for the two prisons Ms. Berghuis oversees.

Special Election: Gamrat Claims Win, Lyons Readies Bill To Prevent Similar Situations

Former Rep. Cindy Gamrat announced her victory in an Allegan County Tea Party straw poll with just 30 voters, and the chair of the House Elections Committee is getting legislation ready that would block expelled lawmakers in the future from being able to run to fill their vacancy.

Ms. Gamrat trumpeted her victory, though not all the candidates challenging her appeared at the tea party event on Wednesday. She called the meeting a great chance for voters to meet and question candidates. She is running to succeed herself in the 80th District.

Meanwhile, Rep. Lisa Posthumus Lyons (R-Alto), chair of the House Elections Committee, said she is drafting legislation that would ensure candidates who resign or are removed from office would not be able to run in the special election filling the vacancy.

If the legislation were already in place it would affect both Ms. Gamrat and former Rep. Todd Courser in the 82nd District. Mr. Courser resigned in the early hours of September 11, and Ms. Gamrat was expelled about an hour later. Both are running to win election back in those seats.

There appears to be nothing in statute now that would block the two from running in the special elections to fill their seats. However, House Speaker Kevin Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) has expressed openness to not seating her if she were to win in the 80th House District, from which she was recently expelled (See Gongwer Michigan Report, September 19, 2015).

Ms. Lyons said she hopes to introduce the legislation in the near future. The bill could not affect the elections now scheduled. The special primary election in each district will be on November 3, and the special general election will be on March 8.

Ms. Gamrat said the forum she attended gave her a chance to show she is fighting to give Allegan County voters a voice and will attend additional candidate forums in the next few weeks.

"Lansing's voice is not Allegan's voice, the Lansing political class has been pushing for more spending and higher taxes, which is out of step with most of the people in Allegan County," Ms. Gamrat said in a statement. "The decision of representation should be made by the voters, not Lansing's political establishment, and last night was a great opportunity for the voters to engage in the process, hear from the candidates, and ask questions."

Republican candidates Mary Whiteford of Allegan and Jim Siver of Fennville did not attend.

Ms. Whiteford said the Allegan County Tea Party is closely aligned with Ms. Gamrat. She said she has been and will continue to attend multiple events throughout the community.

Mr. Siver, an attorney, said the group invited him Monday for a Tuesday evening event and he couldn't make it.

He and Ms. Whiteford said they are attending forums with the League of Women Voters and the Allegan County Republican Party in the coming weeks.

Shannon Szukala of Martin, a veteran who did attend the event, said many who showed up were there to support Ms. Gamrat. He said he is unsure at this point if they reflect the majority of voters in Allegan County.

Mr. Szukala also said he holds similar values as Ms. Gamrat and would not have filed to run in the seat if he had known she was running. He said he did not withdraw before the deadline because he thought he should follow through with his candidacy.

Allegan County Commissioner Jim Storey of Holland said he has yet to hear from a single voter who says they are going to vote for Ms. Gamrat.

Ms. Gamrat was expelled from office earlier this month after a scandal was revealed that she was having an affair with former Rep. Todd Courser of Silverwood. Mr. Courser resigned before being expelled and is also running for his old seat in the 82nd House District.

A House Business Office investigation said the two former lawmakers misused their offices and taxpayer resources for attempted political and personal gains. Their exit from office came after a 16 hour session where Republican leadership attempted to get enough votes for their expulsion.

Ms. Gamrat and Mr. Courser have both questioned the circumstances surrounding their exits. Ms. Gamrat has also said repeatedly her voters should decide if she is qualified to serve in the House.

To regain her seat, Ms. Gamrat must make it through an eight-person Republican primary and then be seated by the House. Mr. Cotter has expressed openness in refusing to seat her and Mr. Courser.

The Allegan County Tea Party said in a Facebook post three of the candidates, other than Ms. Gamrat, possess the same or close to the same values as the group: Bill Sage of Allegan, Kevin Travis of Hopkins and Mr. Szukala.

The group said Mr. Storey and Eric DeWitt of Holland "would be considered conservative by most Republicans, but not necessarily constitutional."

Of Ms. Whiteford, who did not attend the event, the group said: "(She) is a Democrat running as a Republican."

Carson Cites Education, God For Nation's Strength

SPRING ARBOR - America owes its strength to the founders' focus on education and the influence of God, Republican presidential candidate Ben Carson told a rally of supporters at Spring Arbor University on Wednesday, but the nation needs to get its budget under control to remain great.

Mr. Carson drew his strongest applause from about 2,500 people gathered in the Christian university's fieldhouse for his assertions that he is not politically correct.

Mr. Carson spent much of his half hour address talking about his upbringing in a poor household. He praised his mother both for thrift and for her push that her sons to be educated.

He said she had only a third grade education but made Mr. Carson and his brother read books from the Detroit Library and provide her written book reports "even though she couldn't read them."

Mr. Carson said she only bought new cars to avoid adopting someone else's problems, but only paid cash.

"If my mother were the secretary of treasury, it would not be in deficit," he said.

He said it was that same attention to education that grew the United States into a world power in its relatively brief life.

"When you think about the brain, the incredible human brain, why do we ever talk about what we can't do?" he said. "Early on, we paid a lot of attention to that brain. ... That's the reason that our people were so successful. ... This is the most exceptional nation the world has ever known."

But he said God also drove the development of the nation. He related a story of an opposing commander telling George Washington that he would have to have been under God's protection to have survived the commander's sharpshooters.

"There are many other stories that are well documented that it was more than just us that was involved in the foundation of this nation," he said.

"As a physician and a neurosurgeon, I learned lots of things," he said. "The greatest lesson I learned it is God who does these things."

While he did not directly address his recent comments that a Muslim could not be president under the Constitution, he said there were certain values that do not fit with the American identity.

"I have no intention of being like everybody else and giving away all of our values and principles for political correctness," he said. "Anybody is welcome to come to America, but they don't get to change who we are."

And he said he opposed the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling that allowed same-sex marriage.

"I personally believe the Supreme Court made a mistake when they voted to change the definition of marriage from what it has been for thousands of years," he said. "If you change the definition of marriage for one group, what right do you have to not change it for the next group and the next group?"

He took a dig at President Barack Obama on the issue. "Even though our president says we're not a Judeo-Christion nation, he doesn't get to decide who we are," he said.

Mr. Carson blamed much of the nation's current economic condition on the national debt. He argued the Federal Reserve Board cannot sufficiently increase interest rates because that would mean increasing costs for the federal government.

"They have to keep the interest rates depressed, which is the only way average people can make money," he said. "Only the rich people with the risk tolerance that can invest in the stock market."

He said government regulations also drive up costs, increasing the income spread between the rich and poor.

Democrats attacked Mr. Carson for his opposition to increasing the minimum wage and to the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

"Ben Carson's policies would do a lot to hurt Michigan families," Michigan Democratic Party Chair Brandon Dillon said in a statement. "Unfortunately, the rest of the Republicans running for president are no different."

Meanwhile, the 2016 Committee, a super PAC supporting Mr. Carson, praised him for recent comments on the possibility of electing a Muslim as president.

"Ben Carson is right. A practicing Muslim who observes Sharia Law cannot serve as president," John Philip Sousa IV, chair of the committee, said in a letter. "It is a fact that Sharia law is totally inconsistent with the United States Constitution."

Peters, Stabenow Call For More Protections Against Great Lakes Oil Spills

Ensuring that no crude oil is shipped on the Great Lakes and requiring the federal government assess risks to pipelines were two parts of a bill U.S. Sen. Gary Peters and U.S. Sen. Debbie Stabenow said Wednesday they are introducing to provide greater protection for the lakes from the possibility of oil spills.

The two Michigan senators' action comes after the state unveiled its task force report on a pipeline, and in talking with reporters the two said they hoped they could attach their bill to legislation Congress will consider that reauthorizes the federal Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration.

The two did not call for the closure of the controversial Pipeline 5 that runs under the Mackinac Straits and carries both light crude and liquefied natural gas products.

The state task force report said it anticipated the 60-year old pipeline would have to be closed down someday, and that the state and Enbridge Energy, which owns and operates the pipeline, should plan for that.

But the volume of the materials carried through the pipeline makes it problematic as what would be an acceptable alternative. The task force report looked at the possibility of shipping those products via tankers.

The state already said it has an agreement with Enbridge to not ship heavy crude oil through the pipeline, which the company currently does not anyway.

Ms. Stabenow (D-Lansing) said that agreement "doesn't move the ball down the road."

Hers and Mr. Peters' (D-Bloomfield Township) proposal would bar any tanker or barge from carrying any crude oil on the Great Lakes. Currently, no crude oil is carried on the Great Lakes, and Mr. Peters said the bill would ensure that condition is permanent.

The bill would also cover all pipelines in the region, current and future, and Mr. Peters said he would hope federal reviews of the pipelines would be completed within a year.

The bill also would call for improving response plans in the event of pipeline leaks, and improve public knowledge and transparency of risks.

Report Offers Options For Regulating Fracking

The state has a number of options for reducing risks from high volume hydraulic fracturing operations, a final report released Wednesday by the University of Michigan's Graham Sustainability Institute said.

The report did not make specific recommendations for the state to adopt but provided a variety of options that could improve the state's oversight of fracked oil and gas wells.

"The purpose of this (integrated assessment) is to present information that expands and clarifies the scope of policy options in a way that allows a wide range of decision makers to make choices based on their preferences and values," the report said.

Environmental Quality Director Dan Wyant thanked the group for including his agency in its discussion groups and accepting some of its suggestions.

"The state of Michigan appreciates the Graham Sustainability Institute's work to produce a comprehensive, thoughtful look at issues around oil and gas production in Michigan," Mr. Wyant said in a statement. "This report offers some useful information and options for state regulators to consider in the months and years ahead."

Among the recommendations was to provide additional points for public input.

In developing regulations, the report said the state could run facilitated listening sessions as well as increase membership on the Oil and Gas Advisory Committee or appoint a special committee to address fracking.

When issuing permits, the report said the state could improve notice of the pending permits and require public comment periods. It recommended similar changes when leasing state mineral rights.

"To date, Michigan has largely treated HVHF as an extension of other types of oil and gas activities," the report said. "As a result, the public has had few opportunities to weigh in on whether and where HVHF occurs."

On water withdrawals, the report praised the state's Water Withdrawal Assessment Program, but said it could require metering of withdrawals for fracking and include those uses in its permitting program. The state could also require a site-specific review for any fracking withdrawals.

And the state could prevent contamination from the fracking operations by prohibiting use of any chemicals that have not been proven to be minimally toxic, the report said.

"Michigan's existing information policies primarily adopt a remedial approach to uncertainty, the most common approach of the other states surveyed," the report said.

The state could be more remedial by at least requiring more information in advance, but the report also noted that there is limited information available about many of the chemicals used.

Michigan could also require emergency response plans for wells in sensitive areas and could require that bonds be relative to the potential cost of cleanup, rather than a blanket amount, the report said.

Regional Approach To Economic Development Yielding Dividends, Officials Say

When Governor Rick Snyder first announced his regional prosperity initiative in 2013, there was some hesitation and fear from locals that their individual voices may no longer be heard in economic development conversations, an official for Michigan Works! said in an interview Wednesday, but now the system is well on its way toward those 10 regions with few problems to report.

The Michigan Works! system has been in existence since the early 1970s under a different name and has had as many as 25 different agencies, all with the same purpose of connecting employers and talent, at one time. Though it is set up through federal legislation, the agencies work in a public-private partnership of sorts, and are always locally-driven, said Elaine Wood, CEO of Networks Northwest, the agency serving employers and employees in the Northwest region of the state. Her agency has actually been one that others are looking to as they seek to consolidate their services, because hers has worked in that manner for 30 years, she said.

"Talent is really the highest form of capital for any form of business now. This is the 21st century reality," Ms. Wood said. "I think our level of participation has become much broader than it used to be on a local level, and because Michigan Works is very much a demand-driven system - the employer is our primary customer - all we're doing is responding to the needs of our local companies."

Since the governor's announcement in 2013, Michigan Works! agencies have decreased from 25 different offices to about 16 agencies, Ms. Wood said, so they are "almost there as a system" in terms of their end-goal of 10 agencies. And while there have been some concerns from the county commissioners who have to make the decision to reorganize their respective agencies, most have grown to see the benefit of consolidation, Ms. Wood and other officials said.

One example of that can be seen at the Michigan Works! Southwest agency, Ben Damerow, the director of that agency, said. Data collected through a consulting agency around the time the governor announced the Regional Prosperity Initiative concluded that "employers do not care where they get their talent from," Mr. Damerow said.

In Kent County, for example, 75 percent of its workforce lives and works in Kent County. Neighboring Allegan County - known as a "bedroom community," Mr. Damerow said - determined that about 27 percent of those living there lived and worked in Allegan, but in some circumstances that number can shoot up to 68 percent working in the region together.

"Twenty-seven plus the additional percent working the regions shows, hey, it makes sense for Allegan County, as it relates to their labor force, to be in our region," he said of the makeup of Michigan Works! Southwest.

And then there were those who lived in cities that crossed boundaries. Holland, for example, is responsible for 16 or 17 percent of Allegan County's tax revenue, though a portion of Holland is also in Ottawa County.

"The south side of Holland is a precious resource for Allegan County and it made it very difficult for those customers who had to commute from the south side of Holland into the Allegan service center, which is about 20 miles away, when they could have easily commuted two miles north to the service center in Holland," Mr. Damerow explained. "It's those undue hardships we were putting on the customers because of the way the funding had been split up between the two counties."

And the more things are split up in that matter, the less meaningful and successful services are to the public, Ms. Wood said.

"On the other hand, if you go to the opposite extreme and deliver a sort of one-size-fits-all at a state level, let's say, then you're not paying enough attention to the special characteristics of certain communities. So the regional approach is really, in my experience, the best middle ground for that," she said.

Though Ms. Wood said it was too early in the process to determine whether the regional model had done anything to attract or retain businesses in communities, it certainly seems like from general conversations that it will, she said.

"What we hear from our (Michigan Economic Development Corporation) colleagues is when a company is thinking about locating to another state, they want consistency in services from the different players in a particular community," Ms. Wood said. "They want to know that the talent development people and the economic development people and the education people are all in it together to put together the kind of attractive features they want in order to bring their company there. The regional prosperity initiative is really, really helpful in that regard."

And speaking from her own community's experience, Ms. Wood said the regional approach has raised conversations that perhaps were not being had, or being as closely paid attention to, previously.

"Now having shared governance between the public and private sector, the level of conversation our region is having now about attraction, retention, commercial corridor development, about housing problems, costs of living, you name it, that cuts across all these different things that tend to be legislative and funded very siloed, it's our job locally to take all those silos and turn them over and make something ... where all the pieces fit together," she said. "It's just easier to do that when you have common geographic boundaries and you have more integration of all those topics within a community."

DEQ: Flint Lead Problem From Home Connections

Officials have found lead in Flint's water system, but it is coming from final service connections, Department of Environmental Quality officials said in response to a push from U.S. Rep. Dan Kildee for additional water testing in the city.

Mr. Kildee (D-Flint) called Tuesday for the DEQ and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to have independent testing conducted on the city's water system after the lead findings and complaints of murky water in the system (See Gongwer Michigan Report, September 22, 2015).

Brad Wurfel, spokesperson for the DEQ, said there is a federal rule calling for converting lead pipes to copper, but that the rule is designed to reduce the problem, not eliminate it.

"We felt we were clear that the lead detected in Flint's water is strictly the product of lead in home plumbing," Mr. Wurfel said of the meeting with Mr. Kildee and staff from other elected leaders. "It doesn't come from the river, or the plant, or the cast iron pipes employed for most of the delivery system. It comes from water passing through lead service connections - more than 15,000 of them in Flint, and it comes from home plumbing in older homes."

But he noted that Mr. Kildee is in the best place to push for change because much of what he would like to see happen would require federal funds.

Appeals Court: Restitution In Sex Cases Must Be Based On Facts

Restitution orders in criminal sexual conduct cases must be based on a factual basis of costs a victim may face and not on projections, the Court of Appeals ruled on Wednesday.

The court also said restitution could not be granted to an alleged victim if there is no criminal case dealing with the alleged crime.

Judge Elizabeth Gleicher, joined by Judge Kirsten Frank Kelly and Judge Deborah Servitto, overturned a decision by the Leelanau Circuit Court in People v. Corbin (COA docket No. 319122).

In the case, Jeffrey Corbin was accused of repeatedly sexually assaulting two boys, Shane and Austin (who are both now adults) over a 10-year period. The two brothers revealed the abuse some six years after it ended, and Mr. Corbin admitted to the abuse. He was initially charged with assaulting both brothers, but the charge for assaulting Austin was dropped because the statute of limitations had run out.

After being sentenced to prison, Mr. Corbin was then ordered to pay restitution of $276,800 to Austin and $276,805 to Shane. The restitution was to help both undergo psychological therapy needed to deal with the abuse.

But Ms. Gleicher said restitution could not be paid to Austin because there was no conviction of a crime against him.

In terms of the restitution ordered for Shane, the amount was based on estimates of how much it might cost to undergo the therapy and recoup some lost expenses before the crimes were discovered.

But the Appeals Court said the restitution provision had to be based, according to state law, on a reasonable fact-based system. Shane's restitution was not so based, so the case was sent back to the trial court to reconsider the case on the basis of what the facts would show a proper restitution would be.

Insurance Agents Warned Against 'Sliding'

Insurance and Financial Services Director Patrick McPharlin issued orders on Wednesday banning "insurance sliding," which keeps an insurance customer for getting full details of insurance policies.

In Bulletin 2015-21-INS, Mr. McPharlin said insurance agents who engage in the practice could be put on probation, suspended, have their license revoked or be fined.

In the bulletin, Mr. McPharlin said it had come to his "attention that some insurance producers are engaging in the practice known as insurance 'sliding.'" He did not identify any agents who may have engaged in the practice.

In cases where "sliding" has occurred, charges for additional coverage the customer is unaware of are hidden in a total premium and the premium is higher than what the customer initially agreed to.

Mr. McPharlin said examples of "sliding" include telling customers that roadside assistance is part of a policy when it is not, or saying that a customer must purchase roadside assistance in their policy, enticing customers to buy auto club memberships, or enticing a customer to buy coverages without explaining all the coverages and their cost.

If an agent is accused of sliding, then the department will commence administrative hearings against that agent.

Handy Middle School Principal To Run In 96th House

Democrat Brian DuFresne, principal of Handy Middle School in Bay City, announced on Wednesday he will run in the 96th House District, where Rep. Charles Brunner cannot seek re-election due to term limits.

"We need someone who will continue to work to preserve Bay County as both a community and an economy," Mr. DuFresne said in a statement. "I've lived my whole life in Bay County, and I'm fortunate now to be raising my family here as well, but I remember what this community was and can be again. We need a leader to fight to bring back one of the strongest middle-class economies in our state, a leader who will tell Lansing to stop putting our economic troubles on the backs of our kids and the working class."

Mr. DuFresne said he is entering the race to offer "honest hometown leadership." He attended St. Joseph's Parochial Grade School and graduated in 1986 from Bay City Central High School. He earned an Associate's at Delta Community College, a Bachelor's at Central Michigan University and his Master's in Education Leadership from Saginaw Valley State University.

Mr. DuFresne is a member of both the Michigan Democratic Party and the National Rifle Association.

An announcement rally will take placed on September 26 at noon at the Local 362 UAW Hall in Bay City.

PSC Directs Clear Rate Communications To Provide Proof Of Services

The Public Service Commission has directed Clear Rate Communications, Inc., to provide proof it is complying with state law and PSC regulations requiring telecommunications companies to provide telephone service to deaf and hard-of-hearing residents.

After AT&T Michigan on May 28, 2014 sent letters to basic local exchange carriers in Michigan informing them of its intent to discontinue the telecommunications relay service (TRS) it provided to Michigan carriers, the PSC issued an order that, among other things, required local exchange providers to file customer outreach plans no less than 30 days prior to the transition of its relay customers and to notify the PSC within 10 days of making a change to a new relay service provider by filing a letter in that docket.

The PSC staff questions (case U-17951) whether Clear Rate customer have had access to TRS since February 7, 2015, and the Commission has not been able to determine if the company is providing TRS to its customers on its own, jointly with other basic local exchange providers, or by contract with other telecommunications providers, the PSC said in a statement about the case.

As such, Clear Rate is to file a response by 5 p.m. on October 8 to each of the PSC staff's allegations. That response is to explain whether it has entered into a TRS agreement, and shall be accompanied by pre-filed direct testimony, exhibits, work papers and affidavits supporting the veracity of its response, PSC said.

The company has also been directed to appear at a pre-hearing conference before an administrative law judge at 9 a.m. on October 29 at the PSC offices in Lansing.

MICHIGAN GAS UTILITIES CORPORATION: The Public Service Commission on Wednesday also approved a settlement authorizing Michigan Gas Utilities Corporation to implement its energy optimization plan for 2016 and 2017, resulting in a decrease of 4 cents per month on the bills of residential customers using 100 ccf of natural gas per month. The decrease is effective January 1, 2016 (case U-17789).

Volume #54, Report #190 -- Thursday, September 24, 2015

Less Controversial Third Grade Reading Bill Hits House Floor

Legislation sent to the full House Thursday and designed to increase reading proficiency in elementary school students is less controversial than version lawmakers considered in 2014, but there's still a lot of work to be done before the chamber will vote on the bill, House Education Committee Chair Rep. Amanda Price said.

HB 4822, which aims to increase reading proficiency in elementary school students before they make it to the fourth grade, was reported 13-3, with Rep. Ed McBroom (R-Vulcan), Rep. Tom Hooker (R-Byron Center) and Rep. Pat Somerville (R-New Boston) voting no. Rep. Christine Greig (D-Farmington Hills) abstained.

Mr. McBroom said he voted no because the bill is attempting a one size fits all solution for every student in every school with reading problems.

"I just think that that is ridiculous. It doesn't' work. And it has never worked well," he said. "We ought to come up with a plan that empowers local school districts and the Department of Education to customize their approach to individual students' needs, use the professionals in the classroom, in the administration, in the department, to help every student that needs help, and not pretend that somehow we can create a bill that is going to fix everything for every student."

But Ms. Price said the bill would not apply across the board to all school districts.

"It's a policy that we hope outlines a plan that gets kids to proficiency across the state," she said. "Some of the schools in my district are very high in proficiency levels. So they are doing a lot of good things. But in some areas of the state we are not there."

But Mr. McBroom disagreed: "Certainly there are elements of you could implement this provision this way in this school, and this way in that school. But it's still the same very specific ... way of doing things," he said.

Changes in the H-4 substitute version include more closely tying the policy bill to the appropriations piece in the budget; encouraging schools to offer summer reading camps for struggling readers before they reach the third grade; expanding distribution of read at home information to others who spend time with the child; and clarifying children need to be more than a grade level behind in reading for the smart promotion to apply.

The bill discussed last term originally included a provision requiring the retention of every third grader who could not read at grade level. Although that was later changed, the controversy regarding the automatic retention was never overcome and the House was not able to take up the bill.

"There's been so much stakeholder input, so much work with the governor's work group," Ms. Price said. "(This is) much less controversial. There's still a lot of resonance about making those kids stay back. But I always want to point out the emphasis has to be on interventions on K, 1, 2 and 3 and not about retention."

Under the current version, there are a variety of alternatives to retention. First, the bill attempts to provide intervention before the child gets to the third grade. Second, the bill provides a smart promotion where a student can be promoted to the fourth grade if they are proficient in other subjects and only receive reading instruction at the third grade level.

There is also a good cause exemption to retention outlined in the bill. The smart promotion piece of the legislation would not go into effect until the 2017-18 school year. However, some, including Rep. Winnie Brinks (D-Grand Rapids), would like to see the implementation delayed until the 2018-19 school year.

But Ms. Price said the longer the implementation is put back, more students will be left behind.

"The results I see on reading, we can't afford any more time pushing it back," she said. "We did push it back one year. I just keep thinking in my mind what kids are we going to lose if we push it back even further."

The reported version of the bill also addresses literacy instruction needs for English language learners; clarifies the type of personnel who may be asked to work with students who are retained; and makes changes to language regarding the good cause exemption for students with disabilities.

There were multiple testifiers last week concerned about the bill as it relates to students with dyslexia.

Rep. Adam Zemke (D-Ann Arbor) said discussions are ongoing to address the issue more formally outside the third grade reading bill.

"I know we are having discussions with the other side of the aisle too, and potentially the lieutenant governor, to potentially do some more formal work on this process with regards to students with disabilities. We think it is larger than just things that impact literacy," Mr. Zemke said.

Rep. Andy Schor (D-Lansing) also expressed ongoing concerns about portions of the bill relating to students with individual education plans and special education students. He said he understands it's early in the process and more changes will be made, though.

"I expect a lot more work to be done," Ms. Price said, "because this is not an easy issue for a lot of folks. But at least on the Republican side, this is a caucus priority so I hope that conversations are very fruitful."

State Financial Leaders Present For Quadrant Roads Meeting

Although the legislative quadrant still did not have an agreement as of Thursday evening on a plan to fund roads, the presence of some of the state's top financial officials seemed to indicate that Governor Rick Snyder and legislative leaders may be getting closer.

Treasurer Nick Khouri, Budget Director John Roberts and Transportation Director Kirk Steudle were seen leaving the meeting together on Thursday.

"They're an important resource and we had good discussions on a number of topics," Governor Rick Snyder told media after the quadrant meeting, which lasted slightly more than an hour. "You can go through the list of things that people are concerned about roads, and it's good to have experts."

Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) indicated the conversations are becoming more detail-specific, even if those details have yet to be made public.

"I think we're having real conversations about actual real components of the plan and what it may look like," Mr. Ananich said after the meeting. "We haven't settled on anything yet but we're actually talking about things, so that's better than talking esoterically."

Joining the legislative leaders and Mr. Snyder were Treasurer Nick Khouri, Budget Director John Roberts and Transportation Director Kirk Steudle. Those leaders had not been seen at other quadrant meetings.

Mr. Ananich said the leaders were talking about aspects, looking at other states and best practices, and getting numbers on all ideas.

House Speaker Kevin Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) characterized the meeting as "more progress" and said he felt the leaders were "getting closer all the time."

He said: "On a scale of productivity, it was up there. I think today was at least an eight (out of 10)."

Mr. Cotter said road funding discussions won't hold up other serious matters before the Legislature such as energy reform or repealing the prevailing wage, either. So far, nothing is contingent on roads.

Mr. Snyder seemed to have the same positive attitude, saying he was not ready to "talk about negative actions" such as vetoing bills that come to his desk before an agreement is reached.

"This meeting was constructive today," he said. "We've continued to have constructive meetings. More positive progress is going on, so I want to stay positive about this."

Nofs Continues Discussion On Electric Choice

The Senate Energy and Technology Committee adopted an S-1 substitute to a bill on electric choice that the committee chair said Thursday makes only technical changes and he assured observers the measure will not be the final version of the bill eventually reported to the full Senate.

"I'm a firm believer in the process, and I expect there will be a lot of changes before we arrive at an S-2 substitute," Sen. Mike Nofs (R-Battle Creek), the committee chair, told another packed room of attendees to the meeting.

Perhaps the most substantial of language changes in the new substitute is the addition that, "A customer who fails to provide written notice as required under this subsection shall no longer be eligible to receive service from an alternative electric supplier and shall return to standard tariff service with the electric utility upon expiration of the customer's current electricity supply contract with an alternative electric supplier."

The substitute was adopted with unanimous approval. Sen. John Proos (R-St. Joseph) was absent from committee.

Thursday's committee saw a handful of alternative electric suppliers testify in opposition to the bill at hand, SB 437. Many felt the provisions would essentially end electric choice and brought undue burdens on the customers.

Craig Borr, president of the Michigan Electric Cooperative Association, had several concerns about the new Integrated Resource Planning practices for utilities, for example.

"We understand the necessity ... we certainly are not opposed to that process for (utilities) due to the fact they have a profit quota," Mr. Borr said. "However, we do not believe that a new, central generalization planning process is necessary or needed."

His group took issue with the changes to electric choice. Pointing to Wolverine Power Cooperative - one of its members - as an example, Mr. Borr said the company has successfully been working in the choice market and saved about $100 million since choice started.

"MECA supports several of the changes to electric choice being proposed in SB 437 but also believes there are provisions in the legislation that need to be modified or they will slowly choke competitive retail choice markets in Michigan," Mr. Borr said.

By contrast, Steve Kurmas, president and COO of DTE Energy, said it supported SB 437 and that the IRP process would ensure "a timely review by all stakeholders of new technologies as they evolve. Second, it will ensure a diversified energy portfolio is maintained. Third, it will allow Michigan to adapt to changing federal regulations."

"Finally, it will ensure fair prices for Michigan's families and businesses," Mr. Kurmas said.

On electric choice, Mr. Kurmas urged requiring capacity to be located in the same zone as the load served to ensure reliability.

"Michigan's utilities are responsible to ensure that reliable supply is always there for their customers. Alternative energy suppliers should be held responsible as well," he said. "They have options - build their own generation, enter into bi-lateral agreements with existing generators, or execute an auction for multi-year generation capacity."

Hillsdale College economics professor Gary Wolfram recommended legislative action to incent the state's utilities to do better at controlling costs, improving reliability, reducing pollution and creating better ratepayer outcomes. Mr. Wolfram recently completed a study for the Michigan Conservative Energy Forum, which supports an increase of the 10 percent electric choice cap.

"Michigan has the highest electricity costs in the region and it's the role of the Legislature to pass regulation to protect consumers and improve efficiencies," Mr. Wolfram said in a statement. "On their own, Michigan's monopoly utilities are not incentivized to make choices that are efficient. Through regulation and policy, the Michigan Legislature can make the market more efficient, reduce cost and increase economic activity."

Mr. Wolfram's testimony was criticized by Citizens for Michigan's Energy Future, which supports full regulation and largely represents incumbent utilities.

"Wolfram fails to mention that, on average, deregulated states pay 27 percent higher rates than regulated states," Kelly Rossman-McKinney, the group's spokesperson, said in a statement. "And he disregards the large subsidy that regulated customers in Michigan are forced to pay to cover open-access customers."

She continued: "While deregulation advocates continue to make dubious claims based on free market principles, the truth is they're pushing for what amounts to a backdoor tax increase that falls hardest on low-income residents. Deregulation also makes electric rate more volatile, hurts reliability and gives alternative energy suppliers ample opportunity to cheat the system of massive profits."

It remains unclear how soon the committee may report the bill to the full Senate for consideration.

Broken Tuition Caps Could Mean Changes For 2016 Budget

There appeared general agreement among members of the House and Senate Appropriations Higher Education subcommittees that change was needed to the tuition cap for universities, but not necessarily agreement on how to go about that.

The two subcommittees heard Thursday from the presidents of Eastern Michigan and Oakland universities, the two that increased tuition more than the cap, on their reasons for those increases.

There was some concern raised about OU's increase given the institution had not first spent into its reserves. But the greater concern was that universities could ignore the current cap at will with apparently little negative effect.

"Tuition restraint as a measurement does not seem to be effective since universities can choose when to conform and then fall back inline," Sen. Peter MacGregor (R-Rockford) said.

Mr. MacGregor said he was inclined to find ways to make the universities stay within the caps.

Rep. Michael McCready (R-Bloomfield Hills), chair of the House subcommittee, questioned how the Legislature could better work with the institutions to gauge their needs.

"Most of the testimony I heard was a 4 percent increase was what the universities were looking for in that cap," he said. "How can we as a state work closer to understand these challenges?"

EMU Interim President Kim Schatzel said she did not oppose the tuition cap, but that legislators had to recognize it was a ceiling for periods where the university might, for other reasons, keep tuition and below the cap, but then need to rebuild revenue later.

She said EMU had increased its tuition to rebuild its cash reserves, which had fallen to about a tenth of what some similar institutions had.

And OU President George Hynd said universities are not ignoring the cap.

"We are all very cognizant and cautious of exceeding that tuition cap," he said. "There may be ways of thinking about a tuition cap that may be less punitive and more helpful to the institutions."

He said the current cap penalizes institutions like his that are growing. "We would favor a funding formula that includes a floor and leaves tuition to the institution," he said.

Oakland increased its tuition because needs were simply outpacing revenues, he said. But he said he would prefer to keep adding to cash reserves rather than spending into them given the recent trend of declining high school graduates.

Mr. McCready said the two subcommittees would likely be meeting in the future to discuss the implications of the high school graduation trends.

Rep. Sam Singh (D-East Lansing) said the university's actions were expected. "I've been saying the last three years in this committee that we need to find a new source of revenue for higher ed," he said. "I'm surprised it took this long for you to go over the caps we gave you."

But Mr. Singh and Sen. Tonya Schuitmaker (R-Lawton), chair of the Senate subcommittee, differed on whether the universities had been restored to pre-2011-12 levels when all took a 15 percent hit to balance the budget. Mr. Singh said none had, while Ms. Schuitmaker said the current budget restored 11 of the 15.

Mr. Hynd said his university had not been restored.

Committee Discusses Voting Reforms

The Senate Elections and Government Reform Committee on Thursday discussed three different approaches to delegating the state's Electoral College votes instead of the current winner take all system in a presidential election, but took no action as the committee chair said there is no real consensus from his caucus on change.

No change to the system Michigan has used since the 1800s is also likely for the 2016 election, said chair Sen. Dave Robertson (R-Grand Blanc).

Sen. Mike Green (R-Mayville) presented his proposal in SB 489 first, which would require one presidential elector be chosen from each congressional district and two be chosen at large based on which political party received the most votes for president. Two other states, Maine and Nebraska, have a system similar to what Mr. Green proposed.

"Something like this will encourage (candidates) to campaign in a state where there's an option of splitting the delegates," Mr. Green told the committee. "Some believe the winner-take-all system makes our state attractive, but I believe it's more important we allow all areas of our state to have a voice."

That argument was harshly criticized by Patrick Rose, an election lawyer with the Michigan Election Coalition. He said adopting a methodology other than one that would enter Michigan into a compact supporting national popular voting would take Michigan, and eventually the rest of the nation, back in time to a point where individual states each had different rules.

"It was chaos," Mr. Rose explained, saying that system was also determined by leaders at the time (the 1800s) to be corrupt.

As to the two other states that have a system similar to what Mr. Green proposed, Mr. Rose said that has so far only changed the outcome of one single electoral vote and that Nebraska, specifically, has been trying to reverse its system virtually since it switched to such a method.

Sen. Dave Hildenbrand (R-Lowell) presented his proposal next, SB 197, which would allow presidential electors be allocated to a political party based on the percentage of popular votes. If the number of presidential electors for the leading party was not a whole number, then a fractional number of 0.5 or greater would be rounded up the nearest whole number, and a number less than that rounded down.

"I believe the fairest of all is when every vote is counted equally," Mr. Hildenbrand said.

His bill is tie-barred to SB 88, a bill by Sen. Rebekah Warren (D-Ann Arbor) that would enact the Interstate Compact to Elect the President by National Popular Vote and enter Michigan into the compact. The logic there, Mr. Hildenbrand said, is that his proposal would be used while other states join the compact with hopefully enough joining to make the compact binding.

Sen. Patrick Colbeck (R-Canton Township) expressed reluctance to move into a system as described by Mr. Hildenbrand and later Ms. Warren because, Mr. Colbeck said, it values uniformity more than diversity.

"For me, this gets into this fundamental discussion of the concept of a pure democracy and just our 'add them up and the ones that get the top votes win' versus a constitutional republic," he said.

But proponents of the bipartisan plan say without it, four out of five votes cast in a presidential election are already being ignored. And while the argument of value in diversity seems valid, "When we take the Pledge of Allegiance, it's not one congressional district under God, it's one nation under God," argued Patrick Rosenstiel of the group National Popular Vote.

The committee did not vote on the bills, and, Mr. Robertson said he has no plan to do so in the immediate future.

"We're not going to make any changes for the 2016 election. But ... some of the perception has been, 'Clearly there must be a desire on the part of Republicans to make a change away from winner-take-all,' and others say, 'No, no, that shouldn't,'" Mr. Robertson said. "I can assure you there's no uniformity of opinion on the Republican side."

OPEN MEETINGS: The committee did, however, report HB 4182, which amends the Open Meetings Act to require the physical presence of each member of an elected public body who was voting on an issue. The committee adopted an S-1 substitute that made exceptions for those who are in the deployed in the military or for certain, specific emergencies.

House Panel Considers Independent Inspections For Prison Kitchens

Two bills requiring prison kitchens receive third-party inspections now that the Department of Corrections is receiving food services from a private provider heard testimony in a House committee Thursday, but some members of the House Oversight and Ethics Committee don't appear convinced that's necessary.

Rep. Ed McBroom (R-Vulcan), chair of the committee, and Rep. John Kivela (D-Marquette), are the sponsors of HB 4749 and HB 4748, respectively. Mr. McBroom said in the 1970s, the state exempted its prison kitchens from the inspection requirement because the state was running the kitchens and already doing those inspections.

Now, the Department of Corrections still oversees inspections of the kitchens, but inspections are also done by the private company contracted with the state to provide the service.

Mr. McBroom said it makes sense to have a third-party, independent inspection done in prison kitchens just like restaurants and other facilities.

"Since the state is no longer providing those food services but is contracting that out, it makes sense that those inspections be brought back," he said. "This is not different than inspections at any other public institution."

Mr. Kivela said there are three prisons in his district, and he said he has been outspoken that he wasn't supportive of privatizing the kitchen services in prisons.

"I want to work toward making them work," he said. "When we look at how can we as a Legislature help improve the situation ... I think at the end of the day what would really assist the department ... is having an independent third party do the inspections like they do for any other food service entity."

Mr. Kivela said the contractor would pick up the fee to pay the local health department. However, Kyle Kaminski, legislative liaison for the Department of Corrections, said the state would likely pick up the costs, at least until the contract is renewed.

Mr. Kaminski also said the department is neutral on the bill.

But Nick Derusha, director of the Luce-Mackinac-Alger-Schoolcraft District Health Department, said they are more than capable of taking on the additional inspections. He said the twice-a-year inspections run anywhere from $200 to $600.

Rep. Joseph Graves (R-Linden) said he has heard from inmates and others in prisons that the food is good. He also was skeptical of the accuracy and need of these inspections.

And Rep. Lana Theis (R-Brighton) said she was concerned about making this change in the middle of the contract.

Mr. Kivela said the two inspections a year are scheduled in advance and won't take too much additional time from their process.

"I think the idea of having increased safety and transparency is well worth that small amount," he said.

Rep. Rose Mary Robinson (D-Detroit) said she was excited about the bills.

"It shows we have empathy," she said.

The committee did not discuss in-depth the issues of food service in the prisons during the last two years or the scandals related to those services. The department has recently switched from Aramark to Trinity for its food service after nearly 20 months with Aramark plagued with troubles, lowlighted by repeated concerns about maggots in the food.

Mr. Kaminski said eight contract monitors work for the department and are former food service inspectors. He said they visit facilities two-to-three times a month and conduct monthly inspections.

He said annually, a sanitarian conducts an unannounced inspection of the kitchens as well.

Still, Mr. McBroom said there "is a little bit of concern about what has been going on in midst of safeguards you said are in place."

"Representative Kivela and I have worked hard to make this about going forward and not looking back," he said. "But I don't think that it is entirely fair, then, to not follow some of your statements you just made by just expressing some of the troubling aspects that have recently happened, despite the safeguards you mentioned are in place. ... This is not about drudging that up."

Mr. Kaminski said the department has no position on the bill, and added it is up to the Legislature to decide if the current approach is sufficient.

Ms. Theis also said some of the problems in the kitchens would not have come up without the current inspection process, but Mr. McBroom retorted: "I would contend that it wasn't always the inspection process that brought the issues," to which Ms. Theis agreed.

The committee did not act on the bills. Mr. McBroom said he would like some clarity on who would pick up the costs for the inspections before bringing the bills up for a vote.

Michigan Joins With Other States in Volkswagen Investigation

The scandal that has engulfed the world's largest automaker has led Michigan and 27 other states attorneys general to launch an investigation into Volkswagen.

Last week, the federal government ordered Volkswagen to recall diesel vehicles sold in the U.S. with doctored pollution controls that would show the vehicles meeting emission standards when they were tested but running at higher emission levels when they were not being tested.

The German-based company announced as many as 11 million vehicles sold all around the world were affected by the same computer-generated device. Already the company's chief executive officer has resigned, and on Thursday, credit rating agencies said Volkswagen had been put on credit watch.

A spokesperson for Attorney General Bill Schuette said the states will subpoena Volkswagen executives.

The states could choose to pursue the investigation through either their consumer protection or environmental protection laws, or both. Schuette spokesperson Andrea Bitely did not say how Michigan would pursue the matter.

Along with Michigan, the attorneys general that have so far announced they would participate in the investigation are from Alabama, Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

House Oks Bill Exempting Some Food Establishments From Inspections

The House on Thursday passed an inspection exemption for low-risk foods served at temporary food establishments.

SB 144 passed the House 89-16. The House made no changes to the bill, which now heads to Governor Rick Snyder.

Under the bill, a local health department, based on a public risk assessment, could simply conduct an in-office consultation with the establishment instead of an on-site inspection.

The bill defines "low-risk foods" as:

- Raw or prepackaged food that is not potentially hazardous food;
- Potentially hazardous food that is prepared in a licensed facility and is not prepared on-site; and
- Commercially processed potentially hazardous food that is fully cooked and heated only for hot holding.

PHARMACY TECHNICIANS: The House also sent a bill that makes some changes to a law passed last year regarding the licensure of pharmacy technicians to Governor Rick Snyder.

Under SB 468, which cleared the House 104-1, certain applicants would be excused from the requirement to have graduated from high school or passed the GED test when applying for pharmacy technician licensure.

The bill also would increase the duration of a temporary license from 210 days to one year, and allow a person employed as a pharmacy technician for an employer with multiple locations to work as a limited license pharmacy technician at any of those locations.

Court Of Claims Rules For E.M. On Modifying Retiree Health Care

The former Allen Park emergency manager's decision to modify retiree health care for former city workers was lawful, the Court of Claims has ruled.

In an opinion issued this week, Judge Mark Boonstra granted the state's motion to dismiss the lawsuit brought by retirees of the city government, who challenged changes made to their health care in late 2012 and early 2013.

The challenge was two-pronged. It contested the ability of the emergency manager to modify retiree health care under PA 72 of 1990, the old local financial emergency law, because it contained no provision for what were known as emergency financial managers to modify contracts.

Joyce Parker was still operating under PA 72 of 1990 when she first began moving toward changes in retiree health care, putting retirees under a plan that for the first time would include deductibles and co-pays. By the time the change actually took effect, Ms. Parker was operating under PA 436 of 2012, which enhanced the powers of local emergency managers.

Mr. Boonstra, in his ruling, said the plaintiffs had no evidence that Ms. Parker actually implemented the new insurance under PA 72 of 1990 and so dismissed that portion of the case.

The plaintiffs also mounted a more wide-ranging attack against PA 436 of 2012, the Local Financial Stability and Choice Act, claiming it is unconstitutionally vague.

To support their claim, the plaintiffs assert the act vests the entire "sovereign power" of the state in two executive branch employees, the treasurer and the emergency manager; declares city retirees "interested parties," but excludes them from the rest of the act; and gives the treasurer and emergency manager limitless power.

However, Mr. Boonstra said the claim meets none of the tests necessary to support a charge of unconstitutional vagueness and contains little support for the allegations.

Ananich Urges Action On Flint Water Situation

Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich said Thursday he will continue working on raising funds to provide his hometown with clean drinking water after medical data was released showing increased lead levels in children through the city of Flint.

Medical officials at the Hurley Medical Center used data from all blood lead levels at their facility to analyze differences between those collected between January 1, 2013 and September 15, 2013, prior to the city switching the resource for its water, and for the post-switch period of January 1, 2015 through September 15, 2015.

The results for children five years old and younger found that pre-switch, about 2.1 percent of children were found to have noticeable levels of lead in their blood (that is consistent with Department of Health and Human Services data at 2.2 percent, the officials noted). Post-switch, 4 percent of children tested were found to have lead in their blood.

As a point of comparison, the officials also analyzed the same periods for Genesee County children living outside of city of Flint zip codes. Pre-switch, 0.6 percent of children 5 and under were flagged as having lead in their system. That increased to 1 percent during the post-switch timeframe.

"The findings released today are alarming. Our top priority has to be doing everything we can and finding every available resource to ensure access to safe water for Flint residents," Mr. Ananich (D-Flint) said in a statement. "I will be leading an effort to raise state, private and philanthropic resources to deliver filters and clean water into the community as quickly as possible."

Children with high blood lead levels are at an increased likelihood of attention deficit disorders, having delinquent behaviors and arrests, or having hematologic, cardiovascular, immunologic, or endocrine issues, the officials noted in their presentation.

Mr. Ananich said anyone with concerns about their water should visit flintwaterinfo.com and contact their physician or the Genesee County Health Department immediately.

Corrections Updates Purchasing Policy In Light Of Complaint

Prison stores will have fewer free samples and Department of Corrections policies make it clear store employees are not entitled to personal use of those, a report received Thursday by the Board of Ethics said.

The report is largely attachments detailing the current contract with Keefe, the vendor for the store goods, and the new employee policies.

The report resulted from a complaint filed against Jim Kolb, a store supervisor the Michigan State Employees Association said was abusing his position in the use and distribution of free samples (See Gongwer Michigan Report, June 4, 2015).

The department said in the report that it had complied with the board's recommendation, also formally adopted Thursday, that it take no disciplinary action against Mr. Kolb, given the board's finding that there had been a history of such abuses in the stores that Mr. Kolb was merely continuing.

The department, in the report, revised its policies to make it clear the samples were not for the personal use of the store employees and said it would be contacting all employees annually to reinforce that policy.

The new policy takes effect Saturday under a shortened review process.

It also said it had since changed the contract with Keefe to limit the amount of free samples allowed. Under the new contract, only three samples per store item are allowed, and they are to be delivered only to the Prison Store Contract Committee, which decides what items will be offered in the stores.

FORESTERS: The board also formally adopted its June decision that two Department of Natural Resources foresters had not violated State Ethics Act because the department had the authority to allow them to take on supplemental employment and because they never actually took any outside work.

The Michigan Chapter of the Association of Consulting Foresters had argued that allowing Kevin LaBumbard, Ben Travis and Theresa Sol to take on outside work would be a conflict because they would be in a position to recommend themselves should land owners call the department for assistance.

Senate Panel Reports Venture Investment Bills

Legislation to ensure the state makes no more tax voucher grants to companies through the Early Stage Venture Investment Corporation were sent to the full Senate Thursday.

The three bills - HB 4195, HB 4196 and HB 4365 - were reported unanimously by the members of the Economic Development and International Investment Committee.

The committee also reported a bill changing how often the state has to certify what the taxable minimum wage will be under the employment security act. Democrats on the panel voted against that bill because it did not include a tie-bar to legislation to restore some unemployment benefits.

The early stage venture bills were made necessary when it was discovered the grants made after the corporation was set up in 2003 had failed to produce the economic development results hoped for, putting the state in a position of losing some $600 million. The discovery of that situation created a budgeting worry for the state which the bills are expected to help ease.

Under the legislation, the state could no longer issue any tax vouchers under the program and the total number of certificates available would be reduced to the $450 million already issued.

The bills also change the expiration date of the fund and the vouchers from 2054 to 2030.

The panel adopted an amendment stipulating that up to $154 million of any revenue the state recoups go to the General Fund, and that any monies after that go to the 21st Century Jobs Fund. Sen. Rebekah Warren (D-Ann Arbor) said the fund has helped finance companies that have grown and added more than 1,000 jobs to the state.

And Under SB 500, the state would no longer determine quarterly if the base taxable wage under which unemployment protection tax is paid is $9,500 or has to be reduced to $9,000 based on the financial condition of the state's unemployment compensation fund.

The bill would have the state make the declaration once a year, on June 30, if the wage remains at $9,500 or is reduced to $9,000.

Ms. Warren proposed tie-barring the bill to HB 4655, which would restore six weeks of unemployment benefits cut by the state in 2011. Jobless workers have not seen an increase in their benefits in nearly 40 years, and the bill would help provide benefits for those still unable to find work. The amendment failed along party lines.

Poll Finds Dead Split On Marijuana Legalization

With a good chance Michigan voters will act on at least one marijuana legalization proposal on the 2016 ballot, a poll shows voters are split dead even on the issue.

The poll conducted of Lansing-based Marketing Resource Group found 46 percent said they would support legalization for persons 21 years old and older, while 46 percent were opposed.

But of those most likely to vote, the scale definitely does not favor legal weed: 52 percent said they would oppose legalization to 42 percent backing it.

Groups are out now collecting signatures on proposed bills to legalize recreational use of marijuana for adults. Its medicinal use is already approved for those with certain medical conditions.

Opposition is led by self-identified Republicans, those 65 or older, and so-called "super voters" who vote in every election.

The poll was conducted earlier in September of 600 likely voters, with an error rate of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

The poll also showed Democrats backing the idea with 60 percent support. Independents gave it 50 percent support, while just 29 percent of Republicans supported it.

Younger people also supported the proposal, with 66 percent of those between ages 18 and 29 backing it, while just 33 percent of those aged 65 and older backed it.

Geographically, support was highest in Detroit, where 75 percent backed the proposal, and it had stronger support overall in the Detroit-metro area (though it was too close to call how voting would go). In outstate and rural areas, support fell sharply. In West Michigan, it was opposed by 56 percent of those polled.

House Panel Approves Presidential Primary As Regular Election Date

Every four years, the state's primary elections and any local elections held in conjunction would move up to the date set for the presidential primary under legislation approved Thursday by the House Elections Committee.

The bill (HB 4904), which was reported without objection from committee and has support of the various local government groups, would allow other items than the presidential primary on that ballot and would provide filing deadlines to accommodate that shift.

The bill specifies it is intended to correct a Court of Appeals ruling that the presidential primary was not one of the state's regular election dates and so was not available for other issues.

The committee did strip off an enacting provision that delay it for 90 days out of concern the delay would have it enacted too late to affect the upcoming elections.

Unemployment Down Across State

All 17 of the state's labor markets saw unemployment fall in August, a report Thursday from the Department of Technology, Management and Budget said.

The report said employment was up across the state, but the decline was in part due to people dropping out of the workforce across the state.

"Jobless rates around the state typically fall in August, and this year was no exception," Jason Palmer, director of the Bureau of Labor Market Information and Strategic Initiatives, said in a statement. "Employment increased in August in a number of Michigan regions, however, (and) workforce levels fell in all areas from the June and July summer peak."

Employment increased in 12 markets from July and in all 17 from August 2014, but the total workforce fell in all 17 markets from July and in 10 regions from the year prior.

The lowest unemployment was 3.4 percent in Grand Rapids-Wyoming, down from 4.2 percent from July and 4.9 percent from August 2014, also the lowest rates for their respective periods.

Detroit-Warren-Dearborn retained its position as the highest unemployment rate at 6.2 percent, down from 7 percent from July and 8.9 percent from last August, both marking the highest employment for the state.

Among the counties, Mackinac had the lowest unemployment at 2.8 percent, while Schoolcraft had the highest at 9.6 percent.

Wayne County was third highest at 7.5 percent, Oakland County was 39th at 5 percent (tied with Van Buren and Saginaw), Macomb was 62nd at 6 percent (tied with Kalkaska), and Kent was third at 3.4 percent.

Pscholka 'Good Samaritan' Prescription Drug Bill To Get Hearing

Rep. Al Pscholka said Thursday his bill precluding individuals younger than 21 years old from facing prescription drug-related legal charges when reporting a medical emergency will get a committee hearing.

HB 4843, Mr. Pscholka (R-Stevensville) said, is similar to a recent public act providing immunity for those minors who report an alcohol-related medical emergency.

"We're talking about situations where people sit by and do nothing while lives are on the line," he said in a statement. "Well, guess what? That's the position we're in, too. We can sit by and do nothing, or we can pass this legislation before we lose another young person with a bright future."

The bill will see a hearing in the House Criminal Justice Committee on Tuesday, September 29, at 9 a.m.

Campaign Notes

MOOLENAAR BACKS RUBIO: Republican presidential candidate Marco Rubio, a U.S. senator from Florida, secured his highest-profile Michigan backing yet with an endorsement Thursday from U.S. Rep. John Moolenaar (R-Midland).

"Marco Rubio is a generational leader who has a bold vision for creating jobs in the 21st Century, and I am proud to endorse him for president," Mr. Moolenaar said in a statement. "Marco's plan for a New American Economy is exactly what Michigan and our country needs and I will do everything I can to help elect him."

MITCHELL ENDORSES FIORINA: Republican presidential candidate Carly Fiorina secured a notable Michigan endorsement Thursday when conservative business executive Paul Mitchell, a candidate in the 10th U.S. House District, said he is supporting her for president.

"Our next president must possess the experience to effectively lead our country - experience making tough real world decisions, and understand how the world works beyond the fishbowl of politics," Mr. Mitchell said in a statement. "Our next president must be able to communicate clear conservative solutions to the American people and possess the leadership skills needed to enact them into policy. I believe we have just such a leader seeking our nomination, from outside of government, with real world experience that is needed to move America in the right direction. I believe Carly Fiorina is that leader and I am proud to support her candidacy to be the next president of the United States."

AGEMA, TED NUGENT ENDORSING BILL SAGE IN 80TH: Republican National Committeeman Dave Agema and musician Ted Nugent are endorsing Bill Sage of Allegan in the 80th House District, Mr. Agema said Thursday on his Facebook.

Mr. Sage is one of the eight Republicans running in the 80th House District to fill the vacancy created by the expulsion of former Rep. Cindy Gamrat of Plainwell. Ms. Gamrat is also running.

Mr. Sage has said he is a constitutional conservative and wrote the "Constituting Michigan" resolution that was later passed at RNC. Mr. Agema noted that he helped get it passed at the RNC. The resolution requires K-12 education include certain documents, including the Bill of Rights.

MAC BOARD: Jerry Doucette of Alger County is the new president of the Michigan Association of Counties. Shelley Goodman Taub of Oakland County is now first vice president and Matthew Bierlein of Tuscola County is the new second vice president.

LOAN SETTLEMENT: Michigan residents saw $15.7 million in forgiven loans and $6.85 million in reduced or modified loans in the final accounting of a settlement with South Dakota-based Western Sky Financial, LLC and California-based CashCall, Incorporated, Attorney General Bill Schuette and Insurance and Financial Services Director Pat McPharlin announced Thursday.

The settlement for issuing loans without a license and for charging excessive interest rates still includes $2.2 million in refunds to customers who filed legitimate claims. The officials said the settlement administrator is resolving now how to divide those funds.

CHARITY GAMING: Ledge Meadows Poker Room in Grand Ledge will close as a charity gaming location on September 29 and 1 Eyed Jack Gaming Supplies will forfeit its license as a supplier after the Gaming Control Board found the supplier had made supplemental payments to the venue.

Statute requires charities to pay separately for the venue and the equipment and other services. Officials said Ledge Meadows was reportedly donating space for the games.

"Ledge Meadows acted like a casino by accepting gambling profits from the supplier," MGCB Executive Director Richard Kalm said in a statement. "The supplier and location made an illegal deal, allowing the location to skirt state law."

Officials noted 1 Eyed Jack was placed on probation for much of 2014 for paying fees to Ledge Meadows. It was also cited for allowing a dealer with a felony record.

Volume #54, Report #194 -- Wednesday, September 30, 2015

Cotter Said Now To Back $800M New Revenue For Roads

One of the key pieces for legislative leaders to resolve as they negotiate a road funding package appears to have cleared a key marker with several sources telling Gongwer News Service that House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } supports raising $800 million in new revenue.

There is no agreement, no deal, not even a framework, not yet, for the long-sought roads package.

But six weeks ago, when the House attempted to pass a plan relying on $600 million in new revenue and $600 million shifted from the General Fund to roads, it was plainly clear - from both House Republican sources and sources among others close to the negotiations - that $800 million in new revenue was not under consideration at that point in the House.

In fact, one source close to the negotiations said at the time that { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }, Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive) and the Democratic legislative leadership were willing to work toward a framework of $800 million in new revenue and $300 million shifted from the General Fund, but that Mr. Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) was not part of the talks leading to that conclusion.

Now, however, sources, who spoke on condition they not be named given the sensitivity of the negotiations, say Mr. Cotter is there on $800 million in new revenue. Exactly how much would come from the General Fund is less clear, but sources said the $400 million figure seems likely because it would mean not putting any additional pressure on the General Fund than it will devote to roads in the 2015-16 fiscal year that starts Thursday and it would meet the $1.2 billion figure long cited as the target for new road funding. The 2015-16 fiscal year budget contains $400 million from the General Fund for roads.

Mr. Cotter, asked Wednesday whether he has embraced an 800/400 dynamic, did not directly answer.

"There are a lot of variables, so we haven't settled on a framework just yet, but are working through all of the individual pieces of it," Mr. Cotter said in an interview. "We had a very good meeting today, and I think we are getting very close. Each meeting has been productive, but I think now we are down to a period of maybe a couple of weeks and we could have something."

The frequency of the meetings has picked up. Mr. Snyder and the Legislative Quadrant met twice Tuesday and again Wednesday.

If the leadership and Mr. Snyder can in fact check off the box on how much new revenue to raise, it leaves two major unfinished components.

One: what other bills and issues would be part of an overall deal? Two: once the complementary pieces come together, can Mr. Cotter and House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268401&locid=1" } (D-Auburn Hills) persuade enough members of their caucuses to vote yes to reach the 54 votes needed for passage?

Those following the issue say Mr. Cotter will likely want something in the vicinity of half his caucus, which has 61 members, before proceeding. And that would mean needing about half the Democratic caucus to get to 54.

Tinsley-Talabi Implicated In Bribe While On Detroit Pension Board

Questions about whether { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=259701&locid=1" } could face legal scrutiny in the wide-ranging federal criminal investigation of corruption in the Detroit pension system came roaring back to life Wednesday.

Roy Dixon, an investor who brought several investment proposals before the city's two pension boards, was sentenced to more than three years in prison for disbursing more than $244,000 in bribes to secure support from the pension boards for his proposals. Federal authorities concluded that Mr. Dixon embezzled millions from those investments for personal gain.

At the time of these offenses, Ms. Tinsley-Talabi (D-Detroit) was a member of the Detroit Police and Fire Retirement System Board. George Stanton, who was her chief of staff while she served on the city council and pension board, already has pleaded guilty to accepting a $20,000 bribe from Mr. Dixon and has cooperated with authorities.

Questions have lingered for years about whether Ms. Tinsley-Talabi herself might face trouble, but she has never been charged. In 2013, The Detroit News reported that Ms. Tinsley-Talabi took "a Caribbean trip, campaign cash and a donation from a businessman while supporting his $10 million city pension fund deal." At the time, Ms. Tinsley-Talabi said authorities had not contacted her, but she would cooperate if they did.

The sentencing memorandum from the U.S. attorney in Detroit, filed a week ago, sheds more light on what allegations have been leveled against Ms. Tinsley-Talabi. Mr. Dixon contributed $1,000 to Mack Alive, a nonprofit tied to Ms. Tinsley-Talabi.

And the sentencing memorandum for Mr. Stanton, who faces sentencing Thursday, was more specific. That memorandum says that in 2006, Mr. Stanton agreed to accept more than $100,000 from Anmar Sarafa, an owner of Steward Capital Management and Munros Capital, in exchange for Mr. Stanton helping Mr. Sarafa's $20 million Steward Capital investment proposal pending before the Police and Fire Retirement System Boad.

Mr. Sarafa is a member of the Michigan Economic Development Corporation Executive Committee.

"Stanton passed on to Sarafa directions from Tinsley-Talabi," the memorandum from the government says. "Tinsley-Talabi directed Sarafa, through Stanton, that Sarafa needed to donate $3,000 to Tinsley-Talabi's political campaign. She also directed that Sarafa should give money to former Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick's Civic Fund in order to secure the votes of Treasurer Jeffrey Beasley and the votes of the mayoral bloc. Finally, Sarafa was told to give money to the Detroit Police Officers Association in order to secure the votes of co-defendant and Trustee Paul Stewart and Trustee Martin Bandemer."

The memorandum says the contributions were made, and the board approved his proposal.

The sentencing memorandum from Mr. Stanton's attorney indicates that Mr. Stanton at one point secretly recorded Ms. Tinsley-Talabi, but no incriminating information emerged.

A spokesperson for the U.S. attorney in Detroit did not respond to a message seeking comment about whether a decision has been to charge Ms. Tinsley-Talabi.

Ms. Tinsley-Talabi did not respond to a message left with her seeking comment, nor one left for her via a spokesperson.

Question Raised On Bush-Era Memo As Larsen Named To Court

Newly named Supreme Court Justice Joan Larsen was hailed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and others as an outstanding choice for the court, but her co-authorship of a memo during the administration of former President George W. Bush dealing with habeas corpus rights of terrorism suspects quickly came to the forefront with some individuals calling for her to disclose her role in the controversial actions following September 11, 2001.

During a press conference where she was introduced, Ms. Larsen was asked if she had been involved in any advice to the president on "enhanced interrogation techniques," and Ms. Larsen said she had "no role in interrogation techniques" and only learned about some of the controversy after she came to Michigan to teach at the University of Michigan.

However, after her appointment to the Supreme Court was official, the Michigan chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union released a list of memos the national organization had sought when it questioned whether the Bush administration had authorized torture and constitutionally questionable detention methods of Al Qaeda members and other terrorism suspects, many held at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba.

Among those memos is one from March 5, 2002, co-authored by Ms. Larsen - who was then a deputy assistant U.S. attorney general in the Office of Legal Counsel - and Gregory Jacob, an attorney advisor in the office of legal counsel, on the availability of habeas corpus rights to detainees. The memo was addressed to other attorneys in the U.S. Department of Justice and the memo itself has never been released to the public.

Kary Moss, executive director of the Michigan ACLU, said the organization took no position on judicial appointments, but, "this appointment should be accompanied by full disclosure about the role Larsen played in the development" of policies that authorized "torture, warrantless wiretapping, indefinite detention and other abuses."

A spokesperson for Mr. Snyder - who was asked after the press conference if the governor was aware of the questioned memo when Ms. Larsen was selected - said in an email, "Justice Larsen was fully vetted and we are confident in the decision and her talent, background and abilities."

Ms. Larsen succeeds { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=298201&locid=1" }, who officially leaves the Supreme Court on Thursday. Ms. Kelly was the top vote getter for the court when she was elected in 2010, and Ms. Larsen will have to run in 2016 to complete Ms. Kelly's term on the court.

Ms. Kelly is resigning to return to private practice and advocate for juvenile justice issues.

Ms. Larsen's name caught many by surprise when it was revealed she was Mr. Snyder's top choice for the court. She has no judicial experience herself - but neither did { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=334301&locid=1" } (who Ms. Larsen described as a friend and one of her biggest backers for the court) nor { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=11701&locid=1" } when they were elected - and she said in a press conference it had been "years and years and years" since she had argued a case in court.

That should not matter, she said, since teaching and preparing lectures was described by a friend of hers as arguing in front of the Supreme Court.

Ms. Larsen is a graduate of the Northwestern Law School. Her undergraduate degree is from the University of Northern Iowa. She clerked for U.S. Appeals Judge David Sentelle and then U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia. Ms. Larsen called them both great role models "in terms of thinking through the cases carefully, taking every case as if it is the most important case to be decided, treating the litigants with respect, knowing that their arguments are important to the litigants and to the court."

She also practiced law with the Washington, D.C., firm of Sidley and Austin.

Ms. Larsen joined the U-M law faulty in 2003, and her husband, Adam Pritchard, is also a faculty member. She joked that he was giving up his sabbatical to take over teaching her classes after her appointment to the court.

Asked about her judicial philosophy, Ms. Larsen said, "In short, I believe in enforcing the laws as written by the Legislature, signed by the governor. I believe in enforcing the text as written. I don't think that judges are a policy-making branch of government, and our role is to serve the people by enforcing the laws in the way they were written by the Legislature."

But when asked if she was a member of the conservative law group The Federalist Society, her answer was indefinite and roundabout.

"So, that's a great and interesting question, and I'm not actually sure I know the answer to it. ... If you look on the web you'll see I'm on their speakers list; I occasionally do programs for them. But, whether I'm actually a member or I pay dues, I honestly don't know the answer. So, I, I'm not dodging the question, I just don't actually know the answer. I've done some events for them," she said.

Ms. Larsen has done some events for The Federalist Society, including one in which { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=75601&locid=1" } appeared.

She will also run for election for the first time in 2016 and said she did not think campaign contributions made to her would influence her.

Ms. Larsen was asked if she played any role in the controversy during Mr. Bush's administration on interrogation techniques. "The answer to that is none. I was in the Office of Legal Counsel at the time, but those national security measures in the Justice Department were classified and a close hold. And as you may have read how that process was run there, (there) were only certain people read in those things and I was not one of them. So, I read about the controversial memos when I got back to, when I was here in Michigan. I read them in the newspapers just like I assume you did."

She was not asked specifically about the memo on habeas corpus rights.

Mr. Young called her appointment a "perfect fit with a court that is second to none in its commitment to the rule of law and legal scholarship."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } also said Ms. Larsen would be a "strong voice for rule of law" in Michigan.

But the question of the memo she co-authored did raise hackles.

Lonnie Scott, executive director of the liberal activist group Progress Michigan, said her working in the Office of Legal Counsel during Mr. Bush's administration came at "one of the darkest chapters in American history," and "Michiganders deserve to know whether their new justice believes that torture is legal, that the 4th Amendment doesn't protect Americans from extensive secret government surveillance and that they can be imprisoned without trial."

Supplemental Sees $7M For State Police Lawsuit, $6M For BAM Continuation

The Department of State Police would receive the funds to pay out a massive $7.7 million settlement for a crash involving a State Police trooper broadsiding another vehicle while in pursuit, killing one woman and injuring the two other women in the vehicle under a supplemental appropriations bill approved Wednesday by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

It is the biggest single settlement or judgment in a single case involving the State Police in the data available online from the Senate Fiscal Agency, which goes back to the 1985-86 fiscal year. In most years, combined settlements and judgments involving the department amount to something in the low hundreds of thousands.

Last year, three women - Jacqueline Nichols, Precious Cochran and Ms. Cochran's daughter, Robbie - were driving to a beauty salon together when State Police trooper Timothy Fagin went in pursuit of an individual driving a car without a seatbelt. After signaling the driver to pull aside, the driver didn't stop, and the chase was on, according to a { HYPERLINK "http://www.mlive.com/news/flint/index.ssf/2015/01/state_police_release_dashcam_i.html" \t "blank" } by MLive regarding the incident.

Eventually, the driver continued to speed throughout the backstreets of Flint, and Mr. Fagin, in pursuit, struck the vehicle with the three women. One of the women, Ms. Nichols, was thrown from the car and died. The other two women, including the driver, Precious Cochran, survived, albeit injured.

The Nichols family sought to sue the state for $50 million, according to news reports, and it appears from the supplemental ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB410201" }) approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee that the eventual payout among four separate cases all stemming from the incident - Michael Nichols, et al v. Trooper Fagin; Michael Nichols, et al v. Michigan State Police, Robbie Cochran v. Trooper Timothy Fagin, and Robbie Cochran v. Michigan State Police - that the settlement will cost the state $7,725,000.

An amendment was adopted to the bill (HB 4102) to allow $1 million of that to come from the Risk Management Revolving Fund rather than all General Fund. It was estimated that the fund had about $8.5 million and maximum that could be pulled for a settlement of this nature was $1 million, said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell), chair of the committee.

"We hope issues like this don't arise, but when they do, it's our responsibility to take care of them," Mr. Hildenbrand said in responding to a question from fellow committee member { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=95101&locid=1" } (R-Evart) about the situation.

Shanon Banner, spokesperson for the State Police, said she was unsure how the settlement would be divvied up, as that is something for their lawyers to decide. Mr. Fagin was previously cleared of any criminal wrongdoing by the Genesee County Prosecutor's Office, Ms. Banner said, though the State Police did conduct an internal investigation and found that a violation of department policy had taken place and Mr. Fagin was disciplined accordingly. He remains a trooper.

Ms. Banner was unsure whether the settlement was the largest the State Police had ever seen, but admitted "we don't see settlements this large in our department."

"Michigan State Police does regret the tragic outcome, and while it doesn't change what happened, we hope it will provide some restitution to the affected families," Ms. Banner said.

BAM PROJECT: Also contained within the supplemental is boilerplate language for the Department of State is $6 million for the troubled Business Application Modernization project, which is to be re-appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2015.

An explanation states that provision re-appropriates the funds "as a result of vendor extenuating circumstances associated with the remaining contract deliverables impacting the department's legacy system."

Earlier this month, the state announced it had filed a lawsuit against HP over the project, arguing the company was not complying with requirements that it service the pieces it had completed. A termination of cause letter was issued on August 28, arguing a lack of progress on the project, but HP was to continue providing support for the project.

Hildenbrand Chief of Staff Fred Schaible said the money was appropriated because the BAM project is still going to move forward in some form and this would allow that to continue. Otherwise, those funds would lapse into the General Fund, he said.

Department of State spokesperson Fred Woodhams said none of the money is going to HP.

"The supplemental continues the money set aside for the BAM project. It is money that was not paid to HP due to nondelivery of project items," he said. "The money allows the department to support, to the extent we can, working portions of the project - our online services portal at ExpressSOS.com and the system that serves vehicle manufacturers."

He also said that another vendor had not yet been selected for the project.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE POLICY COMMISSION: Another $50,000 General Fund was also appropriated to the Legislative Council for its Criminal Justice Policy Commission. Officials with the Senate Fiscal Agency said the money is intended to pay for the commission work itself, not a staff member. The commission is chaired by Republican former Sen. Bruce Caswell of Hillsdale.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=83401&locid=1" } (R-Lawton) raised concerns about the funding, though, and it was ultimately cause for her to abstain from a vote on the S-1 substitute adopted to HB 4102, as well as abstaining from reporting the bill to the full Senate.

Appeals Court: Retroactive Exit From Compact Constitutional

Michigan violated neither its Constitution nor the U.S. Constitution when it retroactively withdrew from the Multistate Tax Compact in 2014 to avoid the possibility of losing as much as $1 billion in revenue, the Court of Appeals ruled Wednesday.

The court unanimously upheld a ruling issued late last year by the Court of Claims, in Gillette Commercial Operations v. Treasury ({ HYPERLINK "http://publicdocs.courts.mi.gov:81/OPINIONS/FINAL/COA/20150929_C325258_72_325258.OPN.PDF" \t "blank" }).

The decision, written by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=76101&locid=1" } and joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=152701&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77401&locid=1" }, encompasses cases brought by dozens of non-Michigan headquartered companies, including IBM.

Given the nature of the case, and what it could prove to be worth to both the companies and the state, an appeal to the Supreme Court is likely.

It was a decision involving IBM from the Supreme Court in July 2014 that led the Legislature to move quickly to take Michigan out of the compact.

In the 4-3 decision (it was a three-justice majority with one justice concurring, a technical issue that led some lawyers at the time to suggest the decision was not so sweeping), the Supreme Court held a non-Michigan based company could pass its income under the now-defunct Michigan Business Tax, which was an income tax and would allow companies to apportion their income under a three-step test. That meant the company's income was less and state budget and finance officials warned that the decision could cost Michigan's General Fund as much as $1 billion, which would have had to come from the 2014-15 fiscal year.

The Legislature passed a new statute in early September 2014 withdrawing retroactively from the compact so the companies could not claim the tax break for the years the MBT was in place.

In its ruling, the appeals court noted that the Supreme Court said the Legislature could have chosen to retroactively exit the compact when it enacted the MBT in 2007. The court also said it was following a U.S. Supreme Court holding that tax laws may generally be repealed retroactively, and that taxpayers have no vested interest in any tax law at any particular time.

The appeals court rejected arguments that the statute ending the state's presence in the compact violated federal and state constitutional provisions against impairment of contract. The compact was not enacted by Congress, the court said, so Michigan law governs its interpretation and it is not a contract between the states and the companies. Nor did joining the compact give the compact oversight body regulatory authority over the state and its tax laws.

The court said the compact specifically says that any state can withdraw unilaterally and without notice to the other states.

Nor did exiting the compact retroactively violate the companies' due process rights because the property rights in this instance were not vested. Quoting the U.S. Supreme Court, the appeals court said that taxes are not penalties nor liabilities but the way of apportioning the cost of government to those who derive benefits from its operations.

And the Legislature had a legitimate purpose in enacting the retroactive law, given the possible impact that the state would have to cut as much as $1.1 billion from the General Fund, the court said.

The court also rejected the argument the Legislature violated the constitutional provisions regarding separation of powers. The Legislature did not reverse the Supreme Court's IBM decision, the courts said; it enacted a new law. The law did not "impinge" on the Supreme Court, but corrected a mistake the Supreme Court itself noted.

Also rejected was an argument the law violated the Commerce Clause in the U.S. Constitution because the law does not overburden interstate commerce, nor is it discriminatory. While some legislators made comments in the press the plaintiffs said indicated an intent to discriminate, the appeals court said individual comments by legislators do not speak to overall legislative intent.

An argument that the law violated the First Amendment's right to free speech and to redress grievances to the government failed, the appeals court said, because there is no guarantee the speech or advocacy will persuade or be effective.

Federal Court Rejects Arguments Against New Bridge

Efforts by the owners of the Ambassador Bridge to get a federal court to block the Gordie Howe International Bridge failed Wednesday, as a U.S. District Court judge in Washington, D.C., rejected most arguments brought by the company.

The decision by Judge Rosemary Collyer, in Detroit International Bridge Company v. Canada ({ HYPERLINK "https://ecf.dcd.uscourts.gov/cgi-bin/show_public_doc?2010cv0476-222" \t "blank" }) did not dispute that construction of the new bridge would hurt the business of the Ambassador Bridge. But she rejected virtually every argument the company made that the 2012 decision between the Canadian government and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } amounted to an unconstitutional taking of the company's property, or that the Ambassador Bridge was affected by a presidential proclamation to build a new bridge.

She particularly rejected the arguments by the company that it had an exclusive authority to operate bridges between Canada and the Detroit area. The complaints failed to state a claim, Ms. Collyer said.

And Ms. Collyer said an argument by the Ambassador Bridge that any action to build a new bridge should be subject to judicial review would violate the separation of powers.

She rejected an argument that a federal law on international bridges - which allowed for the agreement on the bridge - unconstitutionally delegated powers of dealing with foreign governments. Ms. Collyer said Congress can delegate its authorities and has done so in foreign affairs to the executive branch, so there is no issue on which to base a claim.

Officials with the Ambassador Bridge company could not be reached for comment on the decision or whether they would appeal.

Snyder: Details On Flint Water Action Coming

With pressure growing to resolve Flint residents' concerns about their drinking water, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said Wednesday that later this week there would be more discussion on "more tangible action items" that will involve Flint city government and the federal government.

Mr. Snyder did not outline what will be discussed later this week except Mr. Snyder suggested that the action he and the state took to distribute water filters to Flint residents over the summer - which only came to light this week - may be part of the continuing action to assist the city until it can complete a system that will draw water from Lake Huron instead from the Flint River.

Asked if Flint officials - the city was under the control of an emergency manager appointed by Mr. Snyder - made a mistake is shifting their water system away from the Detroit Water and Sewerage Department to drawing water from the Flint River (as it is preparing to have a system drawing from Lake Huron), Mr. Snyder said it was possible the implications "weren't as fully understood" when the switch was made.

Water from the river has been found to have higher concentrations of lead, and many local activists have called for the city to switch back to the Detroit system.

On Wednesday, the Legislative Black Caucus called on Mr. Snyder to issue a state of emergency in Flint because of concerns with the water.

Bill Creating More Safety Requirements For Boats, Jet Skis Gets Pushback

Under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB453401" } , a vessel with a person in tow must display a bright or brilliant orange or red flag that is 12 inches by 12 inches and is visible from all directions.

"In tow" is defined in the bill as an extended towline attached to a vessel for the purpose of engaging in a water sport.

Mr. Kesto (R-Commerce Township) told the House Regulatory Reform Committee Wednesday that he generally is not in favor of additional regulations, but, "in this case I believe it is appropriate," he said.

In 2012, he told the committee, a friend of Mr. Kesto's who lives in his district was towing his three children on tubes from a jet ski. A boat then broke the towline and two of the children were killed and one severely injured.

The operator of the boat was not drunk and no charges were filed against him, Mr. Kesto said.

The vice chair of the committee, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=383601&locid=1" } (R-Eaton Township) said he does not think a flag will help. He also said the jet skier Mr. Kesto talked about broke a number of laws - particularly not having a spotter when towing his children. And, he said, the boater who broke the tow line was clearly not paying attention.

"I worry that we are regulating everybody," he said. "We're going to be forced to put these flags on, and I know on my vessels that I own right now ... I don't have any place to even put this flag."

Mr. Roberts also said of the more than 5,000 boating accidents last year, only 52 were related to towing.

Mr. Kesto said it's hard to tell if the flag would have helped in the 2012 incident.

"The question is if we can, and it's not overly burdensome, are we still going to say no because it is only 1 percent (of accidents)," he said. "If you save one life, is it worth it?"

The two lawmakers exchanged a lengthy back and forth discussing if an operator of a vessel would see the flag and how effective it might be.

But { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=322001&locid=1" } (D-Lansing) said he thought the bill was a good idea.

The committee did not act on the bill.

TEAM PHYSICIANS: The committee did report { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB479201" }

, which would allow out-of-state sports team physicians to legally treat their team when traveling to the state for competitions.

Board Approves Contracts Despite Protests Over Protest Process

State officials were warned Wednesday that they could see Freedom of Information Act requests multiply after the Administrative Board's decision to reject protests over two contracts.

The primary focus at Wednesday's meeting was a contract to develop a funding adequacy study for education in the state, but those involved in a bid for incontinence supplies for the Department of Technology, Management and Budget also objected to the abbreviated time to review and protest those bids.

Officials with DTMB said both the bids and the FOIA process were followed for both contracts. Bidders under the current process have five days to file a protest once the bid is announced, and FOIA provides five days for the subject agency to respond to the request.

Both Alex Rosaen, director of public policy and economic analysis for Anderson Economic Group, which had bid in the education adequacy analysis, and Len Wolfe, an attorney with Dykema Gossett representing one of the unsuccessful bidders on the incontinence supplies contract, said they had essentially three days to decide on and file a protest because there was a weekend during the five days to file the protest.

And both said they did not receive requested documents on the winning bid until after the protest deadline had passed.

"The official right to protest this contract has been a sham," Mr. Rosaen said. "No one outside the government knows what was in the winning bid."

Mr. Wolfe said the result in the two contracts would mean more work for the state on future bids. "You are basically creating a FOIA problem," he said. "If you going to basically tell people you've got to file a FOIA ... you're going to have vendors file FOIAs."

Officials said bids were ripe as subjects for FOIA requests once the bid submission deadline passed. Both Mr. Rosaen and Mr. Wolfe indicated they filed requests after the contract winner was announced.

Mr. Rosaen said there had also been concerns raised that the legislation requiring the education cost review had been designed to exclude certain bidders.

The concern was sufficient that { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" }'s representative on the board said he was abstaining from voting on the education review contract. He supported approval of the remaining contracts before the board.

MSHDA Board Approves $3M Toward Improvements In Detroit

In two separate projects, the Michigan State Housing Development Authority approved $3 million total aimed at improving the housing market and economy in Detroit.

But officials said the projects were essentially pilots for ideas that could be used in other communities.

The new programs are designed to boost home values that in many areas of the city are held artificially low by the lack of sales, MSHDA Executive Director Kevin Elsenheimer told the board.

"We have an opportunity coming up that we don't want to let go to make some strategic investments in the city of Detroit," Mr. Elsenheimer said.

The first program, the Detroit Mortgage Program, will use $1.5 million in MSHDA funds, as well as federal funds and grants from philanthropic groups, to back mortgages that banks would otherwise not be able to issue in the city.

The program is not related to the subprime lending situation that led to widespread foreclosures during the recession, Frank Altman, president of the Community Reinvestment Fund, a lead partner in the project, said. "This is a program primarily for conforming borrowers and nonconforming properties," he said. "We're going to look for borrowers who have the ability to repay it."

But he said the mortgages could be for as much as 150 percent of the value of the house.

In addition to improving values by helping owners rehabilitate their homes, the project is also designed, through using first mortgages for the purchase and second mortgages for the rehabilitation, to increase the number of housing transactions in the city, Mary Townley, director of the MSHDA Home Ownership Division, said.

Part of the reason for the low values, she said, is the lack of comparables real estate appraisers use to set a property value.

Ms. Townley said the agency is working with as many as 10 banks for the program, and Mr. Altman said six banks had committed to issue a total of 1,000 loans.

The board approved $1.5 million for the coming year, but Mr. Elsenheimer said the agency could need to spend as much as $6 million over the next five years to keep the program going.

With other funds considered, Mr. Altman said the program had a total potential value of $250 million.

And Mr. Elsenheimer said it could expand to other cities if it works as hoped.

"We hope this will be proof of concept here in Michigan," he said. "We have some other cities that have similar problems."

Another $1.5 million was approved for the Public Spaces Community Places Initiative.

The MSHDA funds would be matched by the Michigan Economic Development Corporation and expanded through a crowdfunding program, supporters said.

The program would provide communities with traditional downtowns to apply for grants for community facilities.

"Michigan's done a phenomenal job for setting our communities on a path to planning and placemaking," Katharine Czarneki, MEDC Community Development Director, said. "The funds are for brick and mortar public spaces."

"It aligns with what our division is currently doing," Tiffany King, placemaking development consultant for MSHDA, said.

Mr. Elsenheimer said cooperation between MSHDA and MEDC makes sense.

"MEDC does some community development things that are very similar to the community development things we do here at MSHDA," he said. "We think it's time to talk seriously about how do we best leverage our resources as well as MEDC's."

RESTRUCTURING: Mr. Elsenheimer told the board in his first quarterly report on the agency's activities that he had made some structural changes that should save money but also make the agency a better place to work.

A first action, he said, is cutting back some on grants from MSHDA's foundation funds. Mr. Elsenheimer said the agency is running a "technical deficit" that he and his administration are working to erase.

"We are in no way running a general deficit," he said. "Our position is very, very strong."

But he said much of the agency's funds are restricted or committed, leaving them unavailable for general operations or certain grants.

Among other key changes is a new travel policy and a new procurement office, he said.

The travel policy, spurred in part by the excesses that caused the resignation of Mr. Elsenheimer's predecessor, included a move to the state's system from the in-house system the agency had been using, he said. It also has cut travel expenses by some 25 percent.

The new procurement office is overseeing about 120 contracts for the agency and is also producing some savings, he said.

But Mr. Elsenheimer has launched an Office of Employee Services and is developing a formal employee engagement process that he said is designed to make the agency a "destination" workplace in the state.

State: No Long-Term Health Effects Expected From Breathing Oil Spill Chemicals

Those living around the 2010 oil spill into the Kalamazoo River should not expect long-term health effects from breathing the chemicals released by that spill, the Department of Health and Human Services said in its final report on the issue Wednesday.

The report acknowledged that those living near the spill did experience health effects, including headaches, nausea, respiratory discomfort, and eye irritation, near the time of the spill in July 2010.

"By August 18, 2010, concentrations of oil-related chemicals in the air had fallen below human health screening levels that protect the public, including vulnerable populations such as children, the elderly, and those with preexisting illnesses," the department said in releasing its { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan.gov/mdch/0,4612,7-132-54783_54784_56159-263152--,00.html" \t "blank" } on the issue.

The report said additional testing in 2011 and 2012 showed no oil-related chemicals in the air around the spill zone at levels exceeding human health protection limits.

Howrylak Offers Bill To Re-open Maxey

With the 2015-16 budget taking effect Thursday, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=317301&locid=1" } introduced a supplemental appropriations bill Wednesday that would re-open W.J. Maxey Training School for juvenile offenders, which was closed under the budget approved earlier this year for the fiscal year that starts Thursday.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB492501" } was sent to the House Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Howrylak said the school specialized in treating youth with mental health illnesses, and he doesn't believe the two public facilities, nor a private facility, will help those previously in Maxey.

He said at Maxey there was exceptionally low turnover, highly qualified staff and statistics proving their work was effective.

"Closing Maxey, I am quite certain, is going to help increase the possibility that these kids are going to end up in prison in the long term," he said.

He said those who were advocating for the Maxey closure do not have a plan and are simply hoping it won't be a regrettable decision.

Mr. Howrylak said some of the youth would end up in prison because of the closure, but Department of Health and Human Services spokesperson Bob Wheaton said no youth are being placed in prison, from Maxey or the other school, because of the closure.

The 48 youths in Maxey have been sent to one of the other two state facilities - Shawono or Bay Pines - independent living facilities, step-down facilities or "half-way houses," or private residential facilities, Mr. Wheaton said.

He said those who were in Maxey have been assigned to a variety of placements by the judges based in part on recommendations from the department on which facility would best meet the needs of the youths and provide the services that the youths need to rehabilitate.

"The closing of Maxey has resulted in no youths from Maxey going to prison or jail. And no youth were sent to prison or jail from Shawono to make room for youth from Maxey," Mr. Wheaton said.

Mr. Wheaton noted Shawono was not at capacity before the Maxey closure, but it is at capacity now.

He also said some who were in Maxey, and who have completed their treatment, have been sent home. But he said they would have been sent home even if Maxey hadn't closed, because their treatment was finished.

Mr. Wheaton said all of the youth have been transferred to new placements as of Wednesday, the last day of the fiscal year. He said the transfers have been taking place for months since the final decision to close the center was made.

The department will continue to have a small crew of staff members remaining at Maxey to finish closing the facility down, he said.

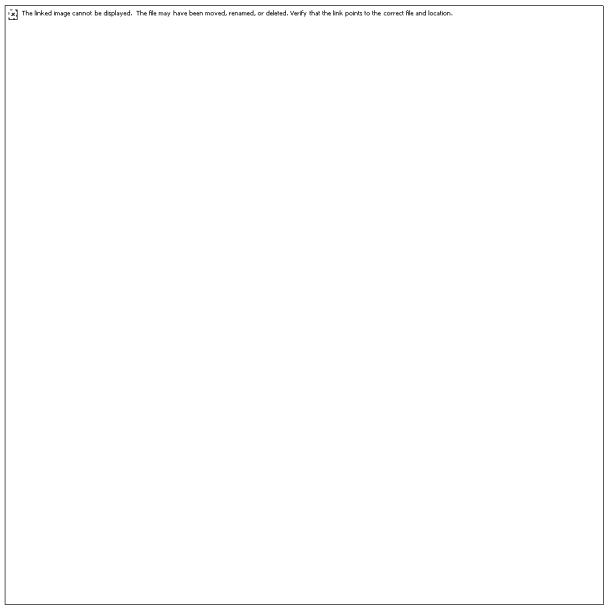
Senate Appropriations Renames Room For Gast

Former Sen. Harry Gast's memory as chair of the Senate Appropriations Committee will live on after the committee on Wednesday officially renamed the room to honor of the Southwest Michigan native that served some 32 years in Lansing, 18 of which were spent working on the budget.

Mr. Gast died at the age of 92 at the end of July (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=541490101" }).

"He always kept the local focus. If you wanted to meet with him, you'd hope that you could meet with him on his tractor," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=102801&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph) said of Mr. Gast on the Senate floor as it adopted a concurrent resolution of tribute ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SCR1601" }

). "This family is a unique family - they gave their dad up for us, to have his great service in our chamber."



Members of the Senate Appropriations Committee gather for a picture to rename the room after the late former Sen. Harry Gast, whose daughter (blue coat) was also present for the ceremony.

Once session adjourned, most of the committee members met in their room, joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=323601&locid=1" } (R-Berrien Springs), to recall memories of Mr. Gast, who served in both the House and the Senate. Mr. Gast's daughter, Barbara Curtis, was also present.

"With term limits, none of us on this panel got the privilege to serve with Senator Gast. I had an opportunity to meet Senator Gast ... to this day, I have no idea what the meeting was about because I was so nervous," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell), chair of the committee, said. "I'll never forget the impression he left on me because of the respect he had of this place ... and how influential he was."

The panel was treated to a history lesson from a Capitol tour guide about the significance of the Senate Appropriations Room, which of course used to be the room for the Michigan Supreme Court to hear cases.

"If we had a Mount Rushmore for public servants, Harry Gast would be on that mountain," Mr. Pscholka said. "He was one of a kind."

Mr. Pscholka later spoke on the House floor at it adopted the Senate's resolution.

Mr. Proos gave one more story about when he spoke in front of Mr. Gast for { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=2401&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph), and how after that, Mr. Gast "pulled me by the tie and said, 'you don't have enough damn gray hair yet,'" Mr. Proos said. "And by that, he meant, listen and learn."

Ms. Curtis gave a statement to Mr. Proos to read on behalf of her family and made only a quick comment about her father after.

"He strongly believed there were the right things to do and he could facilitate those things ... by bringing the right people together to talk about those things and the issues for both sides," she said.

Two signs indicating the official name of the room will be split, with one directly outside of it and the other inside, Mr. Hildenbrand noted.

Senate Approves Electronic Proof Of Insurance

Legislation enabling drivers to present electronic proof of auto insurance was approved by the Senate on Wednesday and sent to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s desk.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB419301" } would ensure that Michigan is no longer the only state in the Midwest that does not allow drivers to use a phone application for insurance validity. The bill saw unanimous approval from the chamber.

"This legislation simplifies life for Michigan drivers by allowing them to present proof of insurance on their phones and other devices, which they always have with them," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=282201&locid=1" } (R-Lawton), sponsor of the bill, in a statement. "There are many benefits to allowing electronic proof of insurance, including the fact that electronic coverage is more difficult to falsify, so cases of insurance fraud will go down."

Currently, those who do not have proof of insurance during a traffic stop may later reduce the amount of a fine or fee by visiting the local courthouse with a paper copy of their insurance documents. But with electronic proof, Mr. Nesbitt said, people will save time and money by not having to drive to a courthouse after a traffic stop.

"This bill utilizes the best technology available so drivers don't have to jump through so many hoops if their insurance information is not correct in the LEIN system," he said. "It also allows law enforcement and the SOS to identify people who are skirting the law, which will make our streets and highways safer and save law-abiding motorists money. It's time to bring our insurance enforcement into the 21st century."

Heise To Run For Plymouth Township Supervisor

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=266001&locid=1" } announced Wednesday he is running for the Plymouth Township supervisor post in 2016.

Mr. Heise (R-Plymouth) cannot seek re-election in the House due to term limits.

"Plymouth Township I really think is on the wrong track right now on many levels," Mr. Heise said on why he running for the post.

Mr. Heise said his skill-set and education - he has two law degrees and will soon be in his 25th year as an attorney in the state - set him up to bring accountability to the position. He said the current board is more worried about politics than professionalism.

Mr. Heise said he will be challenging Shannon Price, the current supervisor, who was appointed in April. Mr. Heise said the interview and selection process was controversial. Mr. Price is well-known in Republican circles and is a former Wayne County commissioner, setting up a big-time battle for the GOP nomination.

If elected, the term lasts from 2016 until 2020. Mr. Heise said at this point he is not interested in running for attorney general in the future.

"I am really more of a local government guy," he said. "I think this would be an exciting new chapter of service."

Capital Notebook

MASSASAUGA RATTLESNAKE: The state might have to make some changes in the management of some of its lands in eastern massasauga rattlesnake territory if the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service enacts proposed rules naming the snake as a threatened species.

But those changes would be minimal, Dan Kennedy, endangered species coordinator for the Department of Natural Resources, told Gongwer News Service, because the DNR has been preparing for the federal rules since they were first recommended in 1999.

"The DNR's been working with the Fish and Wildlife Service on massasauga conservation for 16 years," he said.

The department is in final negotiations on management plan that would allow the state to continue most of its work with some changes, mostly in timing of activities, since it would become illegal to kill the snakes, Mr. Kennedy said.

For instance, the department would have to time prescribed burns to have the least impact on the snakes.

Mr. Kennedy said he did not know what effect the federal rule, expected to take effect in September 2016, might have on private land use in the region.

Massasaugas prefer swampy areas with nearby grasslands and are declining across their range (Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Ontario, Canada) largely due to loss of habitat.

CHRONIC WASTING DISEASE: The DNR launched a new { HYPERLINK "https://youtu.be/HoqJRfZkl4k" \t "blank" } Wednesday explaining the neurological disease in deer and how it will affect hunters with the archery season beginning Thursday.

ONLINE SHOPPING: The Department of Treasury reminded online shoppers Wednesday that, beginning Thursday, they would need to keep any receipts from their purchases.

New legislation takes effect October 1 that clarifies which online businesses have to collect sales tax and, where the business does not, the customer is required to pay use tax on the purchase.

"It is important for individuals to understand that this is not a new tax; Michigan's tax on these types of sales has been on the books for more than 80 years," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=393601&locid=1" } said in a statement. "The new provisions simply mean that various on-line and remote sellers, that will now be deemed to have some presence in the state, will begin collecting tax on the sales they make into Michigan."

CLEAN FUELS MICHIGAN: Nearly 30 companies and organizations in Michigan on Wednesday announced the formation of Clean Fuels Michigan, a new 501(c)(6) organization aimed at maintaining Michigan's position as a global leader in automotive manufacturing by advancing a "clear vision, strategy and advocacy centered on advanced powertrain technology and innovation," the groups said in a statement. "The overall goal is to promote investment, job growth and sustainable technologies in Michigan."

Michigan is one of relatively few states with no incentives supporting the purchase of alternative fuel vehicles, the group cautioned, and the state must act quickly so it can capitalize on that developing marketplace and improve its overall economic competitiveness.

"Our members collectively believe in economic opportunities that stem from developing this technology and markets in Michigan," Eric Clinton, Manager of NGV Business Development at DTE Energy, said in a statement.

The group will advance clean fuel neutral policies, such as electric, natural gas, propane and hydrogen fuel cell technology, as well as advise policymakers and help commercialization efforts.

GRAND HAVEN EXPANSION: GLASSource, a specialty glass and mirror facility in Grand Haven, will expand its facility with the help of $209,000 in Community Development Block Grant funds for infrastructure improvements heading to the city of Grand Haven.

The street is in very poor condition, a statement from the Michigan Economic Development Committee indicated, and needs to be reconstructed before an expansion can take place. The project - expected to generate nearly $2 million in private investment and create 21 jobs - will result in the reuse and development of an old manufacturing facility.

MEDC also announced Michigan Strategic Fund approval of $152,119 in Community Development Block Grant funds for the city of Grand Haven to make facade improvements for buildings located in downtown Grand Haven. The project will generate private investment of $69,835.

The Draft Biden organization circulated a news release Tuesday with the wrong Michigan legislator backing Vice President Joe Biden running for president. Former Rep. Fred Durhal Jr. is supporting Mr. Biden, not his son, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=358001&locid=1" }. The release the Draft Biden organization circulated listed Fred Durhal Jr., but described him as a current, first-term member of the House who is an assistant minority leader (which Mr. Durhal III is). However, it is his father, Mr. Durhal Jr., who is backing Mr. Biden.

A campaign note in the Tuesday Michigan Report incorrectly claimed that the Great Lakes Education Project endorsed Mary Whiteford in the 80th House District in the 2014 Republican primary. While GLEP is endorsing Ms. Whiteford in the upcoming special election, it made no endorsement in the 2014 Republican primary.

Pressure Mounts On Flint Water; Snyder Prepares Actions

A coalition of Flint and state organizations asked the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency on Thursday to order a switchover of the Flint water system with the Detroit Water and Sewerage system, in what is one of the most striking actions in the controversy. The demand came as state officials plan to announce a series of actions on Flint on Friday dealing with the water problems in the city.

One legislator - who also complained he had been denied documents from the state dealing with the switch from the Detroit system to using water from the Flint River (a state official said the wrong documents had been requested) - said there had been a general discussion, but no specifics about what Mr. Snyder might announce. Rep. Phil Phelps (D-Flushing) said he expected the state would provide more filters to residents to help curb lead in the water. Filters will be helpful, Mr. Phelps said, but not enough.

Governor Rick Snyder will not be at the event, to be held at Kettering University, but Flint Mayor Dayne Walling, along with Environmental Quality Director Dan Wyant, Health and Human Services Director Nick Lyon, Urban Initiatives Director Harvey Hollins and the state's chief medical officer, Eden Wells, will speak on the initiatives being pursued.

The presentation will be at 1:30 p.m.at the university's Innovation Center, 1300 Bluff Street.

The controversy over the water in Flint has grown exponentially since indications that lead levels, caused mainly by antique pipes and their connections, were elevated in children who were tested. Researchers said they could not absolutely say the elevated levels were from the water, but the measures showed the increase since the city made the switch. Also on Thursday, it was announced that the city had received donations to provide some 5,000 water filters to help contain the lead.

Prior to the discovery about elevated lead levels, the controversy over the system dealt largely with the smell and taste of the water. Flint switched from using Detroit water to drawing water from the Flint River in 2014 as the city prepared to build its own system that would draw water from Lake Huron. The switch was made largely because Flint and Detroit could not agree on a short-term contract to use the water, and the city, under a state-appointed emergency manager because of financial problems, did not want to pay the cost of Detroit water.

In a press conference on Wednesday, Mr. Snyder acknowledged that in making the switch, not all factors were probably considered.

The request for the EPA to order both the city and state to make the switch to Detroit water came with a variety of city and state groups, including the Concerned Pastors for Social Action, the Flint Water Study Team, the Michigan Nurses Association, the NAACP-Michigan State Conference, the Natural Resources Defense Council and the Michigan branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, getting involved.

The request charged that neither the state nor Flint were doing enough to fix the problem and urged that both be ordered to immediately have Flint's water system reconnected with the Detroit system, and that city residents be provided with a free source of water that meets EPA standards.

Mr. Phelps, meanwhile, complained that the Department of Environmental Quality denied and the Department of Treasury ignored a Freedom of Information Act request for documents related to the city's switch from Detroit water to river water. Anytime there is a change in water systems of the course of water, the community has to apply to the state for that authority.

But Brad Wurfel, with the DEQ, said Flint did not have to file that application because the city had always listed the Flint River as its back-up should it need it for a water supply.

However, there are other documents that are available - to Mr. Phelps or anyone - dealing with the process the city and state took preparing for the switch, Mr. Wurfel said.

Mr. Phelps said a DEQ official contacted him and said there were documents available and that they would be sent to him. The official asked that he drop his FOIA request, Mr. Phelps said.

On the advice of his lawyers, Mr. Phelps said he did not drop the request. But he had also asked the department for any documents that might have to do with the switch. After his request was denied, he received several documents dealing with the system, but the documents were from 2007 and did not have to do with the switch.

Mr. Phelps was surprised by the refusal and was planning what steps to next take.

In terms of what the state should do to help in the situation, Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) told reporters after session on Thursday that he thought the state should first help with distributing filters to residents, especially those who may be most vulnerable, listing pregnant women, children, women that are nursing, those with immune system issues and the elderly among them.

"That should be done immediately," Mr. Ananich said. "I think we need to have corrosion control put in place as quickly as possible. Unfortunately, I think we need some independent, outside testers to come in and develop the confidence level that's just not there with traditional people in place. And I think we need to have a serious look at reconnecting with Detroit. I think the state needs to help us find a new source of water."

He said he would reserve judgment about how well the state has responded to the situation until after the administration makes its recommendations and remains unsure about any estimates on how much it might cost for Flint to reconnect to Detroit water.

"There's been some negotiations going on at the local level, but I think it's important to get the real cost because it's a public health issue. And I'm hopeful we'll find that. I would hope that all folks, with an issue of this magnitude, would not try to gouge a community that's been suffering the way they are," Mr. Ananich said. "I think we need to all, at the state level, make sure people are negotiating in good faith."

And Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive) said he is unsure what the state's role should be in terms of helping Flint. The Senate did, on Thursday, include a $100 placeholder to deal with Flint's water crisis in an appropriations supplemental it passed, but that was to keep the conversation going, Mr. Ananich said (see separate story).

"I don't know that we really have a solution there yet," Mr. Meekhof said after session. "We could use revolving funds maybe. I don't think the city of Flint is in as bad of financial trouble as the city of Detroit, so if they need to bond for something, they would have assets with which to bond and maybe fix the problem. There's lots of options that are out there."

Cotter Monitoring Tinsley-Talabi Situation

House Speaker Kevin Cotter said Thursday he is watching for further developments involving the allegations against Rep. Alberta Tinsley-Talabi that she solicited and accepted bribes while a member of a city of Detroit pension management board, but at this point has no plans of the House pursuing action against her.

The difference between Ms. Tinsley-Talabi (D-Detroit) and former Reps. Todd Courser and Cindy Gamrat, who were put through expulsion proceedings (Mr. Courser resigning and Ms. Gamrat getting expelled), is that the investigation into the conduct in question started with an outside agency, Mr. Cotter said.

"I have been aware of this for some period of time ... just monitoring," Mr. Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) told reporters. "I know this is being investigated at the federal level. If we are called on at any point in time to assist or just called for information or things of that nature, we would certainly cooperate."

Sentencing memoranda filed in the past week by the U.S. attorney in Detroit involving two defendants in a wide-ranging probe of corruption in Detroit government suddenly brought new life to the allegations against Ms. Tinsley-Talabi that first surfaced two and a half years ago.

According to the memos filed by federal prosecutors in the cases against Roy Dixon and George Stanton, Ms. Tinsley-Talabi's chief of staff when she served on the Detroit City Council, Ms. Tinsley-Talabi allegedly helped orchestrate a bribery scheme to ensure an investor with a proposal before the Detroit Police and Fire Retirement System Board of Trustees won approval for his proposed investment. Through that scheme, the investor contributed $3,000 to Ms. Tinsley-Talabi's city council campaign via Mr. Stanton.

Additionally, the memos accuse her nonprofit of receiving a $1,000 bribe from Mr. Dixon.

Ms. Tinsley-Talabi has not returned calls for comment. She would only answer "nothing" Thursday to an MLive reporter who approached her on the House floor.

Calls to the spokesperson for U.S. Attorney Barbara McQuade about whether the federal government continues to investigate Ms. Tinsley-Talabi have not been returned the last two days. The Detroit News, without citing sources, reported that she does remain under investigation.

Ms. Tinsley-Talabi might have a legitimate beef with the U.S. attorney accusing her of soliciting and accepting bribes in a sentencing memorandum, but not actually charging her, at least not yet, said Peter Henning, a Wayne State University law professor and former federal prosecutor.

"This can be problematic because it's accusing her of a crime without going through all of the usual requirements, presenting evidence to a grand jury, having a determination," he said. "Certainly, Tinsley-Talabi has a fair claim that, 'If you think I did something wrong, accuse me of it.'"

While the sentencing memorandum presents the bribery allegations as fact, all it really constitutes "is a statement by a witness as to what that person claims happened," Mr. Henning said.

The other major question is one of statute of limitations, Mr. Henning said. In general, federal crimes have a five-year statute of limitations. The alleged wrongdoing occurred in 2006 and 2007. Ms. Tinsley-Talabi left the council in January 2010 after losing her 2009 re-election bid.

Perhaps a charge under the federal RICO statute, which has flexibility on statute of limitations, is a possibility, Mr. Henning said. It's also possible the government long ago charged her and did not unseal the indictment or a defendant might agree to a tolling agreement where the statute of limitations is lifted, he said.

The government also might lack sufficient evidence to pursue charges or might have obtained the evidence too late for the statute of limitations and decided to at least air publicly what it had, Mr. Henning said.

"It may be that the government's memorandum is trying to send a message - not that it's going to charge in the crime, but to the citizens and perhaps even to the state House," he said. "I would think if we were going to see a charge against Tinsley-Talabi, we would have seen it already."

Educator Evaluations Clear Latest Hurdle, Head To House Floor

The House Education Committee on Thursday reported its second piece of major legislation in two weeks in sending teacher and administrator evaluations to the House floor after four months and four previous committee hearings with no action.

The legislation crafted by Sen. Phil Pavlov (R-St. Clair) has been slightly controversial in the House after Rep. Adam Zemke (D-Ann Arbor) and now-Sen. Margaret O'Brien (R-Portage) spent much of last term creating statewide evaluation standards and training requirements that saw support some education interests. And when the bill cleared the Senate earlier this year, Mr. Zemke and Ms. O'Brien both expressed disappointment in the changes that had been made (Ms. O'Brien voted against it on the floor).

But on Thursday, SB 103 cleared the committee 14-2 with Rep. Pat Somerville (R-New Boston) abstaining. Rep. Ed McBroom (R-Vulcan) and Rep. Thomas Hooker (R-Byron Center) voted no. The bill includes both training requirements and options for school districts and public school academies to develop their own evaluation tool or make modifications to an existing tool.

Mr. Pavlov has emphasized the importance of local control in the evaluation process, but those in opposition to his original bill asserted it did not do enough.

Under the H-7 version of SB 103, the Department of Education would have to establish and maintain a list of teacher and administrator evaluation tools, and the list would have to, at the very least, include the tools recommended by the Michigan Council on Educator Effectiveness in 2013. The tool utilized by districts does not have to be the same for teachers and administrators.

For teachers, beginning in the 2018-19 school year, 40 percent of the year-end evaluation shall be based on student growth, with half coming from the state assessment and half coming from a local assessment.

Ms. Price also said new members of the House are not familiar with the issue, so there's still a fair amount of work to be done before a vote can be taken with the full chamber.

For administrators, beginning immediately, 25 percent of the annual evaluation shall be based on student growth and assessment data. The data is an aggregate of student growth data used in teacher evaluations in the district where the administrator works.

Training for teachers and administrators on evaluation tools is also required. School districts and PSAs could create a consortium of two or more to conduct the trainings. All evaluators and observers would also be required to receive training from a person who has expertise in the training tool.

A school district or public school academy could also develop its own tool, and the department would promulgate rules for how a district would submit its own tool for placement on the list. Also required under the bill is for the district or PSA to publish on its website a variety of information about the evaluation tool and the evaluation process beginning in the 2016-17 school year.

Of that information, a district or PSA would have to outline why its local evaluation tool or modification is appropriate, as well as the qualifications of the author of the tool or modification.

Mr. Zemke said the version of the bill reported from the committee gets the legislation closer to what he and Ms. O'Brien introduced last term. He would not comment on if he hopes to see additional changes made to the bill, only saying he was happy enough with the bill that he voted for it in committee.

Administrator evaluations would be conducted by the superintendent or chief administrator of a PSA, or their appointed designees. The board or board of directors would evaluate the superintendent or chief administrator.

If an administrator received an ineffective or highly ineffective rating, they would be required to create an improvement plan. For both teachers and administrators, if they received three consecutive ineffective or highly ineffective ratings, they would be let go.

For both teachers and administrators rated highly effective or effective for three consecutive years, their evaluations could move to biennially. The evaluations would move back to annually if the teacher or administrator received a lesser rating.

Beginning in the 2018-19 school year, districts would be required to either not allow a teacher with three consecutive minimally effective or ineffective ratings to teach the same subject area to the same pupil for two consecutive years or tell the parent why it cannot comply.

Also for teachers, at least two classroom observations are required each year, with one unscheduled, unless the teacher has been rated effective or highly effective for two consecutive years. Beginning in the 2016-17 school year, the administrators responsible for the evaluation must conduct at least one observation.

Finally, beginning July 1, 2018, the superintendent of public instruction shall not issue an initial professional teaching certificate unless the person has taught for at least three years and has received three effective or highly effective ratings either consecutively or nonconsecutively.

Ms. Price said there weren't many conversations with Mr. Pavlov in regards to the latest version of the bill, but she said she believes he will be able to accept it.

Mr. Pavlov's chief of staff, Brenda Resch, said Mr. Pavlov is pleased to see the bill move.

"Schools need to have certainty on this issue - the ones we've been hearing from have been preparing for current law," she said. "This has statewide impact on every teacher in every district, so it's important to get it right. He looks forward to the House completing this quickly so schools can move forward with setting policies that ensure quality for kids and fairness for educators."

Presumptive Parole Clears House With Schuette Still In Opposition

More prisoners would be presumed, absent compelling reasons, to not be a menace to society after serving minimum sentences and be released from prison under a bill that cleared the House on Thursday despite continued opposition from Attorney General Bill Schuette.

Mr. Schuette has long opposed presumptive parole and says the legislation will jeopardize the safety of Michigan residents.

HB 4138 cleared the chamber 67-39, with 21 Republicans and 18 Democrats voting no on the bill. Thirty-nine Republicans and 28 Democrats voted in support.

Rep. Kurt Heise (R-Plymouth), the bill's sponsor, said there are safeguards in place to ensure a person is not released from prison that would still be a danger to society.

"The parole guidelines are not being changed here at all. All we are saying is if you meet the thresholds for release, you are going to be released," he said on the House floor. "And even then, the Michigan Department of Corrections can still say 'nope.' There are safeguards in place. This is not on autopilot. That's a great bumper sticker, folks: 'this is not on autopilot.' This is a very well thought out process that we have put into place."

Mr. Schuette, however, continued to say in a statement that the presumptive parole measure allows the "the automatic and early release of violent criminals without the parole board determining the risk and safety dangers of violent criminals."

But the House Fiscal Agency analysis states plainly, "this would not be automatic." Under the bill, compelling reasons against presumptive parole include: objective and verifiable evidence that a victim would be caused hard by release; the prisoner has a pending felony charge; and the there is evidence the prisoner would be a danger to society if released, among other reasons.

The bill will now go to the Senate for consideration. Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive) said there are pieces of the bill he does like.

"But also, when we convict people here in Michigan of felonies, only about 20 percent of them go to prison," he said. "So that means people that are in prison are bad people. We have people which we're scared of and people we're mad at, and maybe we can do some different things with people with which we're mad at. Maybe we can have their debt to society paid in a different way."

Rep. John Chirkun (D-Roseville) and Rep. Vanessa Guerra (D-Bridgeport) spoke in opposition to the bill. Mr. Chirkun described an offender in his district that was found guilty of armed robbery and is a dangerous offender but would still qualify for release under the bill.

While he was speaking, House Speaker Kevin Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) was visibly shaking his head no to signal that the person would not qualify.

Mr. Meekhof said he doesn't think there is intent in the legislation to let violent criminals out of prison.

He said the state "can do a better job of making sure that when they come out, they have a place to go, they have jobs of which they can go to and maybe turning away from a life of crime is a better option for them. That would be what we'd like."

Mr. Heise said in the 1980s and 1990s, to be "tough on crime," the state began putting more people in prison and toughening sentences.

"Did that work? Instead we've got thousands of people in prison right now who really don't need to be there," he said.

Mr. Cotter said he is happy with the reforms put in place and noted the bill is not retroactive.

"This is something that will be well-known at the time that sentencings are set. As I have been saying throughout this process, a minimum sentence has got to mean something," he said. "Why are we giving a minimum, why are we giving a range if that is not serving as a minimum for those who are model prisoners?"

Mr. Cotter did not say if Mr. Schuette called him about the bill, saying only they talk often. He also said he believes any concerns on legislation are often justified.

"It is something he obviously has strong opinions on. And we do too. So it's just a difference of opinion," Mr. Cotter said.

Chris Gautz, spokesperson for the Department of Corrections, said the department's projections show the bill in 10 years could lead to a decline of 3,000 prisoners. That would lead to savings of about $80 million annually after year 10, he said.

Rep. Ed McBroom (R-Vulcan), the only Upper Peninsula representative to vote yes on the bill, called the tactics against it, "fear-mongering." He said the stories of tragedy told have happened under the current system.

"To use the current system's tragedy as an argument against trying to fix the system ... is kind of a nonsensical argument," he said.

ROLL CALL: Republicans voting no: Rep. Tom Barrett of Potterville; Rep. John Bizon of Battle Creek; Rep. Lee Chatfield of Levering; Rep. Triston Cole of Mancelona; Rep. Laura Cox of Livonia; Rep. Ray Franz of Onekama; Rep. Joseph Graves of Linden; Rep. Thomas Hooker of Byron Center; Rep. Holly Hughes of White River Township; Rep. Larry Inman of Williamsburg; Rep. Nancy Jenkins of Clayton; Rep. Joel Johnson of Clare; Rep. Dan Lauwers of Brockway; Rep. Tom Leonard III of DeWitt Township; Rep. David Maturen of Vicksburg; Rep. Aaron Miller of Sturgis; Rep. Peter Pettalia of Presque Isle; Rep. Jim Runestad of White Lake; Rep. Jason Sheppard of Temperance; Rep. Lana Theis of Brighton; and Rep. Henry Vaupel of Handy Township.

Democrats voting no: Rep. Charles Brunner of Bay City; Rep. John Chirkun of Roseville; Rep. Scott Dianda of Calumet; Rep. Gretchen Driskell of Saline; Rep. Pam Faris of Clio; House Minority Leader Tim Greimel of Auburn Hills; Rep. Vanessa Guerra of Bridgeport; Rep. John Kivela of Marquette; Rep. Robert Kosowski of Westland; Rep. Marilyn Lane of Fraser; Rep. Bill LaVoy of Monroe; Rep. Derek Miller of Warren; Rep. Jeremy Moss of Southfield; Rep. Sheldon Neeley of Flint; Rep. Phil Phelps of Flushing; Rep. Sarah Roberts of Saint Clair Shores; Rep. Charles Smiley of Grand Blanc; and Rep. Henry Yanez of Sterling Heights.

POLL: Hours before the House action Thursday, the Citizens Alliance on Prisons and Public Spending released a poll that showed not only support for the changes in HB 4138, but a reversal in public attitudes toward crime and corrections.

"There's a complete 180 degree turnaround by voters," Ed Sarpolus, executive director of Target Insyght, which conducted the poll. "The priorities have switched."

The poll showed 64 percent support presumptive parole for eligible inmates. And incarceration ranked last among the options for reducing crime, with 34 percent saying long-term incarceration works. Mental illness treatment topped the list, with 82 percent saying it would reduce crime, followed by early childhood education at 80 percent.

Those polled also saw crime as a low priority for the state, with only 7 percent ranking it as their top concern. Road and bridge repair was the top priority for 25 percent, followed by the economy and jobs as top for 18 percent.

Some 70 percent said the state should be spending less on corrections.

The poll also saw 83 percent support for ending the mandatory two-year incarceration for felony firearm and giving discretion to the sentencing judge.

The poll, conducted September 15-17 of 800 likely voters, had a margin of error of plus or minus 3.5 percentage points.

PROBATION: Another criminal justice reform bill (HB 4137), approved by the House 101-5, would make various changes to probation policies, including creating swift and sure probation programs, which target high-risk felony offenders who have a history of probation violations or failures. Those offenders would receive intense supervision under the program.

Under the bill, a judge would be charged with carrying out the requirements of the program.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY: The House also approved a bill allowing any local elections held in conjunction with the presidential primary to move up to the date set for the primary.

The bill (HB 4904), cleared the chamber 105-1 and would allow other items than the presidential primary on that ballot and would provide filing deadlines to accommodate that shift.

It specifies it is intended to correct a Court of Appeals ruling that the presidential primary was not one of the state's regular election dates and so was not available for other issues.

ABLE ACT: Legislation that would allow individuals to open a savings account to pay qualified disability expenses of a designated beneficiary without having that money used against them for disability benefits also passed the House unanimously Thursday.

HB 4542, the primary bill in a three-bill package, would require an individual or designated representative to enter into an agreement with the Michigan Achieving a Better Life Experience

Program when opening an account, and then allow contribution to an account up to limits imposed by the Internal Revenue code and rules promulgated by the state treasurer (the idea for an ABLE savings account began in Washington, D.C., last December).

The bill limits an account balance to the amount allowed for an Education Savings Program account and allows income tax exemptions for contributions to an ABLE savings account as well as qualified withdrawals from an account provided in the Income Tax Act, addressed in HB 4543.

HB 4544 requires the state to disregard money in a designated ABLE account when determining a person's financial ability to qualify for other benefits.

Engler Goes To Bat For Storey In 80th House

Republican Jim Storey of Holland picked up a big-name endorsement Thursday in his special election bid for the 80th House District when former Governor John Engler urged voters to support him.

Mr. Storey, an Allegan County commissioner, is one of eight Republicans vying for the GOP nomination in the race to fill the vacancy left by the House's expulsion of former Rep. Cindy Gamrat. And besides Ms. Gamrat, he is one of two Republicans (the other being Mary Whiteford of Casco Township) with early traction.

Mr. Storey held several posts during Mr. Engler's time as governor, most notably as an appointee to the Liquor Control Commission, but he also headed up efforts to aid the surrounding communities when the U.S. Department of Defense shuttered the Wurtsmith and K.I. Sawyer Air Force bases and served as president of the Michigan Strategic Fund.

"Jim Storey provided outstanding results in every assignment to which I appointed him during my administration," Mr. Engler said in a statement. "I know him well, I trust him and so can the voters of Allegan County. My association with Jim dates to my own time in the Michigan Senate when he headed the House Republican press office. He was knowledgeable, hardworking, and highly effective. It is that combination of experience and conservative values, in my view, that Michigan sorely needs in the era of term limits, especially given the events of the last few weeks."

Mr. Storey said he got to know Mr. Engler in 1979. Then-House Minority Leader Bill Bryant had named Mr. Storey as House Republican press secretary, and Mr. Engler had just won election to the Senate after eight years in the House. Mr. Engler frequently stopped by the House Republican leadership office, and the two both worked on Peter Secchia's bid for Republican National committeeman.

Sources in Capitol community said Mr. Engler has been asking some members of his former administration to help Mr. Storey, and Mr. Storey said he has seen signs of it.

"I'm very grateful - very grateful - to the governor for giving me the visibility in Lansing that I may not have had because I haven't been in Lansing for the past few years," he said.

Mr. Storey said having the endorsements of the district's two representatives prior to Ms. Gamrat (former Reps. Bob Genetski II and Fulton Sheen), plus former Sen. Wayne Kuipers (who represented adjacent Ottawa County) and Mr. Engler should send a message to voters.

"All three say that I can be effective in delivering results for Allegan County and its communities," he said.

Cotter On Prevailing Wage: If Votes Are There, We'll Take It

House Speaker Kevin Cotter said Thursday to the call from prevailing wage supporters to allow the issue to go the 2016 ballot that the Legislature has the right to act on the initiative.

"I think there is broad support within our caucus to make the change. And if the votes are there, I plan on taking the vote," he said to reporters after House session.

The comments are similar to those Mr. Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) made to Gongwer News Service two weeks ago.

Mr. Cotter also said he hopes to hold a vote on roads sometime this month.

"We are at a period now of weeks. We are not talking months. I have been saying for some time now I want to get this on the floor in October, and I think we are on pretty good pace for that," he said.

Mr. Cotter also again addressed whether he supports $800 million new revenue, $400 million General Fund framework for roads. Several sources have indicated he is embracing the outline.

"For me it's not just about the proportion, how much is new revenue, how much is General Fund, but all the other details that make up a package," he said. "Where is it coming from and at what degree? And also what other pieces of the package exist."

Mr. Cotter, when asked if a Health Insurance Claims Assessment fix is still on the table as part of an agreement, said he would like to keep the package focused on roads as much as possible.

"Obviously HICA is an ongoing issue whether it is part of a roads plan or not. I am hesitant to complicate one priority with another," he said.

One source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said this week as far as what Democrats are negotiating for as part of a road funding deal, there are two camps: one looking for assurances prevailing wage won't be repealed and another looking for tax relief for middle class families.

LEGISLATIVE FOIA: On some legislative Democrats calling for the Legislature to be subjected to the Freedom of Information Act, Mr. Cotter said the House has posted a variety of financial and salary information on its website.

He said House members deal with a lot of personal constituent information and he worries about that being made public. He noted the House Business Office report into former Rep. Cindy Gamrat and former Rep. Todd Courser accidentally published two former staffers' social security numbers.

Controversy Develops In Senate On Taxable Wage Base Bill

A bill that would require an annual, rather than quarterly, determination of the balance of the Unemployment Compensation Fund to set the taxable wage limit prompted a debate among Senate Republicans and Democrats about how much the state pays out in benefits and for how long.

SB 500 would also provide for the determination to be based on the fund's balance as of the previous June 30, and require the taxable wage limit to be reduced from $9,500 to $9,000 for the calendar year if the balance was $2.5 billion or higher on that date and projected to remain that level for the next quarter.

The Unemployment Compensation Fund is dedicated to paying unemployment benefits when due and is funded by employer contributions.

Senate Minority Floor Leader Morris Hood III (D-Detroit) offered an amendment to the bill that would have tie-barred the Senate bill to SB 525, which raises the maximum unemployment weekly benefit rate and indexes it to inflation. It would also restore the maximum timeframe for benefits from 20 to 26 weeks, Mr. Hood said in a speech on the floor.

"While I believe the goal of adjusting taxable wages based on a healthy trust fund was well-intended, I didn't support it then and I don't support it now," he said. "Considering the fact that it's been 13 years since we last adjusted the maximum weekly benefit and there have been so many other slashes to this program, I think my amendment is more than reasonable."

But his amendment was defeated largely along party lines, as was an amendment proposed by Sen. Rebekah Warren (D-Ann Arbor) that would have tie-barred the bill to HB 4655 that restores the additional six weeks of unemployment cut by the Legislature and signed into law in 2011.

"Our trust fund got into some trouble, we had to borrow money from the federal government ... and the fact that we're standing here with a healthy reserve is a testament to the hard work we've done in policy to make sure the trust fund is sound," Ms. Warren said. "If it is sound, let's ... give them just a little bit more."

SB 500 cleared the Senate on a 26-9 vote along party lines. Sen. Steve Bieda (D-Warren), Sen. Goeff Hansen (R-Hart) and Sen. Hoon-Yung Hopgood (D-Taylor) were absent from session.

SUPPLEMENTAL INCLUDES PLACEHOLDERS FOR FLINT, U.P.: A $100 placeholder for Flint water services and another dedicated to "rent and state office facilities" were included in the final version of HB 4102, a supplemental appropriations bill that passed the Senate on Thursday.

"The rationale is we wanted to make sure we had an accurate number. We didn't want to put too much in or not enough and have to come back," Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) said of the placeholder for Flint. "We want to get an accurate understanding of what it's going to cost to get us the help we need. My colleagues have been very good about allowing this first step.

House Speaker Kevin Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) said he is still reviewing the placeholder, though, and is not sure yet if the state has a responsibility.

"Obviously it is critical that we all have access to clean water, but at what point does it become a state responsibility is the question," he said.

The other amendment to HB 4102, offered by Sen. Tom Casperson (R-Escanaba), is to continue the conversation on costs associated with the closure of the Department of Health and Human Services office in Alger County, Senate Republican spokesperson Amber McCann said.

Sen. Tonya Schuitmaker (R-Lawton), Sen. Phil Pavlov (R-St. Clair), Sen. Joe Hune (R-Whitmore Lake), Sen. Patrick Colbeck (R-Canton Township) and Sen. Judy Emmons (R-Sheridan) voted against the bill, leaving the final tally at 30-5.

The supplemental includes more than $7 million for the state to settle a lawsuit involving the death of one and severe injuries of two others after a State Police trooper struck their vehicle while in pursuit of another vehicle. Records going back to the 1985-86 fiscal year show no other single case with a judgment against the state or settlement that high.

DEED SCAMS: The Senate also passed a bill, SB 366, regulating the solicitation of a fee for providing a public record.

The bill by Sen. Curtis Hertel Jr. (D-East Lansing) arose after a constituent complained to Mr. Hertel, who was at the time Ingham County's Register of Deeds, about paying an exorbitant amount of money for a deed that turned out be a scam. The sender claimed to be a local records office and required the recipient to pay way more than one should for a public record like a deed, or else (See Gongwer Michigan Report, July 1, 2015).

Senate Energy Expects One More Week Of Testimony On Bill

After another three-hour committee meeting Thursday, Sen. Mike Nofs told Gongwer News Service he expects to have one more week of testimony on legislation to update the state's energy laws before a substitute can be presented with "four or five issues" that could see some changes.

Mr. Nofs (R-Battle Creek), the committee chair, did not get into too many details about what those items would be, though at least one came up in testimony on Thursday, which is the issue of pre-payment of fees for alternative electric supplier companies. One of those companies, Wolverine Power Marketing Cooperative, said such a provision seemed "punitive," as it was solely focused on alternative electric supplier companies given that "no other utility in Michigan is being obligated to do this," said Kim Molitor, president and CEO of the company.

SB 437 - the focal point of Thursday's debate - requires an alternative electric supplier to pre-pay its contracts for the required periods if it relied on power purchase contracts for any portion of its demonstration of capacity supply. And if an alternative supplier relies on capacity that was the result of a wholesale market auction for any portion of its demonstration of capacity supply, the purchases cannot exceed 5 percent of the AES's capacity requirements.

Instead, Ms. Molitor recommended the committee consider subjecting AES companies to rules set forth by the Midcontinent Independent Systems Operator, which oversees power supply for Michigan and other Midwest states, as a way to ensure capacity. By MISO's rules, a company can either participate in a capacity auction or submit a fixed resource planning option to demonstrate that they are able to serve their load of customers as well as reserve requirements.

"It's not feasible for any AES company to pay those pre-payment fees," Ms. Molitor said. "The most appropriate method would make the AES utilities follow the same rules as the utilities, and that is the MISO rules. I think making them live in that world levels the playing field for all electric providers in the state."

Another issue Mr. Nofs was willing to divulge is that of capacity, who should oversee that matter and how much is necessary to keep the grid reliable and affordable for ratepayers.

"You hear that we're putting some costs or concerns on capacity and that's a question that's still open that we're still looking at," he said. "How can we facilitate our concern of capacity for an AES to be able to report, that we feel comfortable, that the Public Service Commission will feel comfortable, and therefore we're not going to be subjected to penalties coming from MISO if they were short?"

Mr. Nofs said he does not plan to introduce a new substitute to either of the bills next week, and when asked if last week would be the last week for testimony, he said, "We're hoping so," but reiterated he will take as much time as is necessary for everyone to have a say.

"The process is important to me, and giving people the opportunity to speak is important to me, so we try to take in all the cards we get that day and try to take care of them," he said. "There are a lot of good recommendations coming from the participants and they're offering the language. I'll go to the very end if someone has got a better idea than what we've thought about here and it will make it that much stronger."

Mr. Nofs said he, the governor and Rep. Aric Nesbitt (R-Lawton), chair of the House Energy Policy Committee, are all hoping to have work completed on this energy package by the end of the year.

PSC Reports $4.2B In Savings From Efficiency Programs

Michigan energy customers in 2014 have been able to save $4.2 billion from the state's energy optimization programs that began in 2009, the Public Service Commission announced Thursday.

The revelation came as the PSC released its report on the state's energy optimization programs and the cost effectiveness of PA 295 of 2008. The report showed that overall, 2014 energy optimization program savings achieved for electric utilities were 141 percent of the target and 130 percent of the target for natural gas utilities. Those targets were set in the original act.

"The cheapest energy is the energy never used, and this has proven to be the case again with Michigan's energy optimization programs in 2014," PSC Chair John Quackenbush said in a statement. "Because they focus on reducing energy waste, energy efficiency programs benefit all utility customers. For every dollar spent on these programs in 2014, customers can expect to realize $4.38 in savings - more than any year since 2010. Customers who take advantage of energy efficiency programs personally benefit even more."

For measures installed in program year 2014, electric savings total more than 1.4 million megawatt-hours, and natural gas savings total over 4.8 million Mcf, the PSC said. And aggregate energy optimization program expenditures of $257 million in 2014 by all natural gas and electric utilities in the state are estimated to result in lifecycle savings to customers of $1.12 billion.

The PSC also said the downward pricing trend for renewable energy resources and the continued low cost of energy optimization has resulted in a combined weighted cost of $37 per megawatt-hour - which is less than any new generation, including new natural gas combined cycle plants, it noted - when compared to the Energy Information Administration levelized plant costs for 2014.

Calley Heads To India For Trade Mission

In an effort to expand markets for Michigan-made products and encourage more job creation for foreign direct investments in the state, Lt. Governor Brian Calley will lead a delegation of state and business leaders on a trade mission to India starting on Friday, the governor's office said Thursday.

"We are using this opportunity to build strong partnerships with India, creating trade and business opportunities for Michigan companies," Mr. Calley said in a statement. "We will be delivering the message that Michigan is more business-friendly than ever and the best state in the North American market to compete and grow while creating jobs."

Mr. Calley is set to meet with Devendra Fadnavis, the chief minister of the state of Maharashtra, as well as other government officials, the governor's office indicated. He will also provide remarks at the India-Michigan Global Summit, a new initiative launched by the Michigan Economic Development Corporation.

The lieutenant governor will also meet with executives from Indian automotive companies, as well as Michigan companies with operations in India. The trip also will include meetings with Indian automotive suppliers and high-ranking government leaders.

The companies participating in the trade mission are Argo BioMedical from Auburn Hills, FutureNet Group from Detroit, Hosco Fittings from Wixom, Managed Programs from Auburn Hills and Orion Test Systems, also from Auburn Hills.

India is the 11th largest economy in the world with a sizable and rapidly growing domestic market, the governor's office indicated in its statement, as well as growing financial markets. In 2014, Michigan companies exported $296.7 million in goods and materials to India, which included chemicals, machinery, computer and electronic products, and transportation equipment.

The mission is Mr. Calley's fifth since taking office in 2011. He previously led missions to Chile, Colombia, Brazil, Mexico and the Netherlands.

PRESIDENTS COUNCIL ADOPTS NEW NAME: The Presidents Council, State Universities of Michigan, is now the Michigan Association of State Universities.

"We have evolved over the decades from a council of university presidents into a full service association, where a wide array of higher education stakeholders come together to share best practices and collaborate in ways that make our universities stronger," Daniel Hurley, the group's CEO, said in a statement. "The association will remain the state's convener for the presidents and chancellors of Michigan's public universities, and many other groups of institutional representatives to collaborate and share expertise."

State To Contribute $1M As Part Of Flint Water Fix

In the short term, Flint residents will have access to water filters, some purchased with state funds, and in the longer term the city will be improving its corrosion controls to keep lead out of water supplies, state and city officials said Friday in unveiling a plan to address recent water safety concerns in the city.

Moving Flint back to getting water from the Detroit Water and Sewerage System is also still on the table for both state and local officials but will require negotiations, both sides said.

Both sides said the water itself is not the source of lead and the city will be working in the coming years to replace the lead service lines that are the source.

"We're working around the clock on every level with so many partners to address the immediate health concerns," Flint Mayor Dayne Walling said at a media event Friday to announce the plan. "We're now all working on a common response plan."

"We are focused on helping ensure safe, clean, accessible drinking water and addressing and mitigating concerns and protecting public health," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }, who did not attend the event, said in a statement. "Today's action plan builds upon ongoing work with local, state and federal agencies and our partnership with city and community leaders. Together, we are working to ensure that all Flint residents have accurate information and know that help is available to address potential problems."

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said the state still had substantial work to do.

"Filters and corrosion control additives are first steps, but anything less than an aggressive, comprehensive response is still unacceptable," Mr. Ananich said in a statement. "Our top priority remains ensuring Flint families have safe drinking water. I will continue to work to make that happen."

"We can't just rely on the kindness of strangers to protect our children," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=358901&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said, noting recent contributions toward water filter purchases. "The governor and Department of Environmental Quality need to make this an urgent priority."

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=349901&locid=1" } (D-Flushing)

said help needs to happen sooner rather than later. "This is a public health crisis, and our children are in danger," he said.

Mr. Phelps had been pushing the state and the city for more information on the water switch and its effects to little avail (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=541950101" }).

The Sierra Club Michigan Chapter urged that part of the plan be an executive investigation into why the DEQ did not act more quickly on the issue.

"The governor, finally, is assuming direct responsibility for responding to a crisis that every day is damaging the health of Flint's children," David Holtz, chair of the group, said in a statement. "His actions should be much stronger, however, and he needs to find out how we got to the point where Flint children are drinking lead and what the DEQ's role was in those decisions and actions."

The key elements of the plan, from the Snyder administration's perspective, are to continue testing and, in the short term, provide filters for those who need them, Environmental Quality Direct Dan Wyant said at the media event.

The state and the city will provide free water testing for anyone in the city, he said, and both entities are working to provide residents with water filters.

The state also will be testing the water in all schools in the city, Mr. Wyant said.

"We're working closely with public and private partners to provide water filters," Health and Human Services { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=392601&locid=1" } said.

As part of that effort, the state will be providing $1 million and a number of charitable groups are providing filters or funding toward them, but Mr. Lyon said officials were also working with retailers to provide free or low-cost filters.

United Way, General Motors and the Making Our Children Smile Foundation announced Thursday a joint contribution of $105,000 toward purchase of filters.

Mr. Walling said filters would be available beginning Saturday morning.

Mr. Lyon warned, though, that the filters might not resolve the increase in blood lead levels found in recent testing.

"We cannot say conclusively water is the source of this," he said, noting that lead paint in older homes, and the remnants of it in the surrounding soils, continues to be the leading source of lead poisoning.

Mr. Lyons did not take issue with Genesee County's move Thursday to issue a water emergency for the city but said his agency would not be joining. "This is certainly an issue that deserves attention," he said. "I do not believe that it rises to the level of a statewide emergency. We are here with our resources."

Eden Wells, chief medical officer for the state, said two high-risk zip codes in the city did see increased blood levels in tested children after the city switched its water source, but she said levels in those areas, and citywide, were already at least twice the levels found in the rest of Genesee County and only increased significantly in one of the high-risk regions.

In the two highest-risk zip codes, blood lead levels were averaging 2.7 times averages for the county as a whole. After the water source switch, those averages climbed to 3.2 times the rest of the county. But for the city as a whole, lead levels were 2 times the rest of the county, she said.

Mr. Wyant argued the problem was the switch and not the water source. He said one of the state's efforts is to ensure the city has sufficient corrosion controls in place so when it switches sources again away from the Flint River, the problem does not reoccur.

"Every time we tested the water, it was non-detect for lead," Mr. Wyant said of the state's quarterly testing. "So our issue is lead service lines."

Mr. Wyant said the DEQ would be part of a new Mayor's Safe Drinking Water Advisory Committee that would also include officials from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"With the mayor's help, we're going to expedite those corrosion controls," Mr. Wyant said.

"At this point we have confidence that we can put additional corrosion controls in place and it will be effective," he said.

Mr. Walling said the city also needs to step up its efforts to replace the lead service lines.

"We have a gap in our capital improvement plan that needs to be filled and we need to replace lead service lines in our city," he said.

Mr. Walling said the city was still considering switching back to Detroit water while efforts to finish an agreement with Karegnondi Water Authority are completed. But he said the switch would cost the city up to $2 million a month.

"The city is not in a position to afford that cost, but I am looking to Lansing for additional funding and financing so that option could be available," he said.

Mr. Wyant, asked if the state would cover those costs, said only that the state had committed $1 million already toward the problem.

Mr. Snyder said during an earlier media call he was mediating discussions between the city and the Detroit system.

"It's just something that's currently in process ... I'm looking at this as an alternative to go with all these action steps," Mr. Snyder said. "We trying to help everyone get the facts: What is the data on what would be involved with potentially switching back? What would be the cost parameters? That's one of the reasons for the technical advisory council, to make sure we would see better results with switching back."

"I'd like science to make that determination," Mr. Wyant said of the need to change water supplies. "It's our sense that corrosion controls are going to be needed in either case."

In addition to assistance on the ground, the state launched a website, { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan.gov/flintwater" \t "blank" }, with information about the state plan and other efforts to address the water issue.

House 80th Race Between Storey, Whiteford, Gamrat

While it is still believed a long shot for former Rep. Cindy Gamrat to come out of the House 80th District special election primary, the possibility is still there with an eight-person field.

But Ms. Gamrat faces tough competition with Allegan County Commissioner { HYPERLINK "http://www.storeyforallegan.com/" \t "blank" } and Allegan County GOP Vice Chair { HYPERLINK "http://www.votemarywhiteford.com/" \t "blank" } who are seen as frontrunners.

Mr. Storey of Holland appears to have the momentum one his side, at least this week, as he received an endorsement from former Governor John Engler. He also has the endorsement of former Rep. Bob Genetski and former Rep. Fulton Sheen.

The primary special election is November 3. The election comes after Ms. Gamrat of Plainwell was expelled from the House after participating in an extramarital affair with former Rep. Todd Courser and then being found through an internal investigation to have misused taxpayer resources for personal and political gains.

Mr. Sheen said voters in the district are looking for someone who has experience, and Mr. Storey has that in both the public and private sector.

"He's a known commodity," Mr. Sheen told Gongwer News Service Friday.

But he said Ms. Whiteford of Allegan is very much in the race as well, and is leading the field in signs around the district.

One issue with Ms. Whiteford, Mr. Sheen said, is her background is very similar to Ms. Gamrat's. He said they both tout their backgrounds as moms and nurses.

But Ms. Whiteford said that was an issue during the last campaign as well, and is not new to her. She said she tried to focus on her success as an emergency pediatric nurse. Ms. Whiteford noted she is not even sure where or how long Ms. Gamrat actually worked as a nurse.

Another factor for Ms. Gamrat, Jason Watts - who is also involved with the local party - said is that former Allegan County Commissioner Bill Sage, who has the endorsement of Republican National committeeman Dave Agema, will take some votes from the Gamrat camp.

Mr. Watts said he is not aware of Mr. Agema physically helping Mr. Sage in the district. Mr. Sage was also a part of a lawsuit the pair brought against Allegan County schools and the city after they brought a person into a school to talk about the "dangers" of Islam, but were shut down after law enforcement discovered the person may have had a $25 million bounty on their head. The case was dismissed earlier this year.

Mr. Watts also said Democrats in the district may be attempting to get Ms. Gamrat through the primary so their sole candidate, David Gernant, has a chance in the general.

Ms. Gamrat said she was not sure how re-connecting with the voters would go for her after the "negative media" during the last six weeks, but she said it has been going well.

"A lot of people have said my personal life is none of their business and that what Lansing did was wrong," she said.

So far, the candidates said there has not been any mail. But all three candidates interviewed Friday said they will begin issuing mailers soon. Mr. Sheen said the Allegan County Tea Party sent out emails including a Ms. Gamrat piece with a photo of her looking angry and criticizing those in Lansing for expelling her.

There have been phone surveys and messages. Ms. Whiteford said she sent a message last night but has also heard two others without disclaimers.

Ms. Gamrat said there was one telephone push poll that was negative against her, and did not include a disclaimer.

Ms. Whiteford said she is focusing on herself and is not going to go negative against Ms. Gamrat.

Mr. Storey and Ms. Whiteford said they have been knocking on doors and attending several meetings.

Mr. Storey said voters are upset they even have to participate in the special election.

"They are not happy that we face this," he said. "But they are also not at all interested in anything other than sending someone who can restore respect for this county to Lansing."

Ms. Whiteford agreed, saying voters are concerned about having good representation in Lansing.

Ms. Whiteford said if elected, her priority is to create relationships and vote conservatively.

"My priorities are to build relationships and vote conservatively for the people of this county," she said. "And take advantage of being in the majority Republican caucus. I really want to bring a voice for our farmers and out educators."

Ms. Gamrat was kicked out of caucus four months into her term.

Ms. Gamrat said she believes people are underestimating voters in the district and their frustration with Lansing politicians, who passed the state's largest budget but still are exploring a tax increase to pay for roads.

"One of the things voters ask all the time, they say why do they flip, why do people say one thing while they are campaigning and they get into office and they do something else/" she said. "I have a strong record that shows I will stand for the issues against increasing taxes and stand for limited government, for life and for the second amendment."

Mr. Storey said his priorities would include reducing the size of government and fulfilling special projects for Allegan County.

"First of all my priority will be ... to restore respect for Allegan County and value for our voice," he said. "To build the kind of coalitions that is necessary to get anything done."

19-Year MPSERS Error Results In $112M Refund To Seven Universities

The recent discovery of an error in how the state calculated payments to the Michigan Public School Employees Retirement System from seven universities prompted a $112 million refund to those schools.

The state's Office of Retirement Services was in the middle of a review of a new accounting standard to assist the seven universities gradually phasing out of the MPSERS system when staff realized MPSERS had overcharged the universities going back to 1996, said Caleb Buhs, spokesperson for the Department of Technology, Management and Budget.

Seven universities began to phase out of MPSERS starting in 1997 and received a refund September 30: Central Michigan, Eastern Michigan, Ferris State, Lake Superior State, Michigan Technological, Northern Michigan and Western Michigan.

As part of the phase-out - in which new employees were not put into MPSERS - the state allowed the institutions to spread their full retirement liabilities across all employees but made a miscalculation in the process, Mr. Buhs said.

So difficult to detect was the mistake that multiple regular independent audits and peer reviews never discovered it, Mr. Buhs said.

As soon as Office of Retirement Services staff discovered the error, they alerted their superiors who advised universities of the situation, Mr. Buhs said.

The $112 million is equal to just 0.25 percent of total MPSERS assets, he said, and so the refund would have no effect on the system's stability.

Poll Suggests Support To End Prevailing Wage Is Tepid

While a plurality of voters favor ending Michigan's prevailing wage statute, it may not be enough support to prevent voters from blocking its repeal should it go to an election, a poll released Friday showed.

The poll, from Lansing-based Marketing Resource Group, showed that 49 percent of those asked supported repeal of the act, while 39 percent opposed it. Another 5 percent had no opinion and 11 percent did not know.

The results come from a poll done of 600 likely voters, with an error rate of plus or minus 4 percentage points. The poll was conducted from September 9 to September 14.

The issue of voter support may be moot if the Legislature approves an initiated act outlawing prevailing wage. Repeal supporters have turned in petitions signatures, which are still be reviewed by the state's elections officials.

If the Legislature does not approve the initiated act, then it would go before the voters in the 2016 election.

Perhaps one of the most surprising findings in the poll was that respondents who identified themselves as part of a union household were relatively split on the issue. While 43 percent were opposed, a surprising 39 percent were in favor of repeal.

Overall, those identifying as Republicans were strongest in support for repeal, with 60 percent in favor of ending the law. Democrats and ticket-splitting individuals were strongest against, with 53 percent against repeal.

And non-union households split dead-on, with 47 percent both supporting repeal and opposing repeal.

Insurance Code Changes To See Committee Meeting This Week

The House Insurance Committee will take up legislation designed to improve competition in the insurance industry and increase company flexibility in developing new products for consumers, and unsurprisingly, the Michigan Association of Health Plans said it is supporting the bills.

The lead sponsor of the bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB493301" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB493401" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB493501" } ) is { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=325701&locid=1" } (R-DeWitt Township), who said last week the association met with him on the concept and suggested the legislation.

The committee is meeting on the legislation, also sponsored by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=312601&locid=1" } (D-Westland) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=371201&locid=1" } (R-Potterville).

The association said the package of bills is the first major update of state health insurance laws in more than 20 years. Over that time, insurance policies, consumers' needs and the insurance marketplace has changed dramatically. This package seeks to keep state laws strong, including those protecting consumers, while recognizing those changes in state and federal law.

"The health insurance industry is rapidly changing, and it is vital that state laws recognize those changes to allow companies to meet the needs of consumers," said Rick Murdock, executive director of the association, which represents virtually all state health insurance companies. "After discussions with Rep. Leonard, state regulators and consumer organizations, we believe this package addresses key issues while ensuring the state maintains strong solvency and consumer protection policies."

The bills, according to the association, would:

- Update the insurance code to give health insurers the ability and greater flexibility to develop new products in response to market demands;

- Streamline sections of the law that regulates health maintenance organizations to reflect changes in state and federal policies that now apply to all insurers;

- Clean up the code by eliminating duplication and outdated sections. For instance, Chapter 36, originally intended to regulate group disability policies, is now duplicated by Chapter 34, which originally regulated individual policies but has been amended over the years to include group insurers and HMOs. It also clarifies that several insurance mandates currently in law only apply to health insurance, and not to auto, life, or property and casualty insurers;

- Modernize the law to recognize electronic means of communications. For instance, it will allow insurance sales through websites without use of an insurance agent, while setting strong consumer protection standards to allow delivery of notices and forms to insureds and enrollees by electronic means if consumers desire;

- Recognize that virtually all insurers today are required to provide services that used to be provided mostly by HMOs, eliminating most special requirements on HMOs.

- Reduce regulatory requirements by streamlining the readability scoring process conducted by state regulators in certain cases where products are similar;

- Add language that addresses situations where policyholders sign up for coverage, use coverage, but never pay the premium;

- Revise the Code to conform to federal law prohibiting pre-existing condition exclusions and follow federal law for processing grievances, simplifying compliance for consumers and insurers; and

- Update the Patient's Right to Independent Review Act to enable Michigan to maintain its own external review process, rather than defaulting to the federal process.

Senate Legislation Seeks To Expand Promise Zones

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=101501&locid=1" } and at least 12 other senators from both sides of the aisle have introduced legislation to expand promise zones and make some technical amendments for the Department of Treasury to better manage the program.

The bills, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB53901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB54001" }, consolidate current statute related to the program first created under former Governor Jennifer Granholm and inspired by the Kalamazoo Promise, which allows high school graduates from Kalamazoo Public Schools to attend certain universities or community colleges tuition-free within 10 years of graduation.

The main goal, Mr. Hansen's (R-Hart) legislative assistant Anna Mooney said, is to "continue to improve access to higher education for students across the state." The bills are already slated to have a committee hearing next Thursday at 1:30 p.m. in the Senate Economic Development and International Investment Committee chaired by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=179301&locid=1" } (R-Frankenmuth).

Mr. Hansen is the lead sponsor on SB 539, which contains the major components of the package. It allows a governing body, if it is determined to be in the best interest of the public, to declare its intent to establish a promise zone by resolution. That body must then set a date for a public hearing on the adoption of a proposed resolution at least 20 days and not more than 40 days before the date of a hearing, which also must be published twice in a newspaper of general circulation, the bill reads.

At least 15 days after the public hearing, if a governing body intends to proceed with the creation of a promise zone, it must submit an application to the Department of Treasury, which will review the application and determine if the area is eligible to participate. If it is, SB 539 requires Treasury to certify the eligibility to establish a promise zone.

There were 10 promise zones created during the Granholm administration, but the Jackson Promise Zone recently dissolved and the Muskegon Promise Zone is still under development. Under the bill, 15 governing bodies of eligible entities may be established as promise zones.

"It would be expanding the number ... but also to make technical changes on how it's administered from Treasury's end," Ms. Mooney said.

She said Mr. Hansen and his staff have been working very closely with Treasury on the issue and there are no known issues at this time. They are hopeful that the bills will move quickly through the Legislature, but that of course remains to be seen.

"Some of the changes that are needed in this bill will allow for some Promise Zones to get off the ground," she said. "We believe the timing is pretty essential for some of these zones."

A promise zone is required to fundraise privately for the first two years to distribute scholarships. After that time, if it can raise enough money to show a valid public interest in the program (and thus be sustainable), the zone is able to capture half of the growth in the state education tax as determined by the formula outlined in the bill.

Mr. Hansen's bill also gives local school districts the option to not participate in the resolution set forth by promise zone governing body and lays out a process for dissolution of a promise zone by a governing body.

Cities, townships, counties, local school districts or intermediate school districts not eligible by state standards may also still create a promise zone under Mr. Hansen's bill, but would not be able to capture revenue from the state education tax.

The bill creates some reporting requirements for Treasury to assess how well the program is working. Under the bill, the report is due no later than February 15 of each year and must include:

- The number of students who received financial assistance pursuant to the approved Promise Zone Development Plan during the prior calendar year;
- Of those students, the number who successfully completed a certificate or associate program, a bachelor's program, or a postgraduate or professional program;
- The number who withdrew from classes during the prior calendar year;
- The number of students who initially reached successful completion of more than the equivalent of 223 semester credits during the prior calendar year and the average time that took; and

- The graduation rate for students who first received financial assistance during each of the six prior calendar years.

The other bill in the package, SB 540, sponsored by Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint), amends a section of the State Education Tax Act to align it with the other bill.

Court Rejects City's Action To Change Retiree Insurance

Harper Woods could not simply change retiree health care benefits that were established contractually, the Court of Appeals ruled Friday.

In sending the case, Harper Woods Retirees Association v. Harper Woods ({ HYPERLINK "http://publicdocs.courts.mi.gov:81/OPINIONS/FINAL/COA/20151001_C318450_61_318450.OPN.PDF" \t "blank" }), back to the trial court, however, the appeals panel also said the retirees will have to show they have a vested interest in the health care benefits that would extend beyond the limit of any contract.

In an effort to cut costs, Harper Woods notified retirees that it was changing its health care benefits plan to one that would impose larger deductibles and co-pays than the plan the retirees were using and had been included in their contract.

The retirees formed an association and sued, but the trial court found for the city.

Judge Michael Gadola, joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=76401&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=152701&locid=1" }, held the city could not simply change the terms of the contract because it could save money.

The first principle of changing a contract is that a change be mutually agreed to, the court said. And even though the proposals to change the contract could appear reasonable, that is an invalid reason to unilaterally change a contract.

The court also rejected the argument that a 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling allowing a community to change a contract was a governing ruling. State courts do not have to abide with the findings of U.S. courts that are lower than the Supreme Court, the appeals panel said.

Court Throws Out Gag Order In Wayne County Jail Case

A gag order blocking anyone who might be involved in a trial involving the failed Wayne County Jail was thrown out by the Court of Appeals, which called the order overbroad, vague and constituting a prior restraint of the press and free speech.

The decision reversed the Wayne Circuit Court, in People v. Sledge and People v. Collins ({ HYPERLINK "http://publicdocs.courts.mi.gov:81/OPINIONS/FINAL/COA/20151001_C324680_79_324680.OPN.PDF" \t "blank" }).

The case revolves around the decision to halt construction of a new jail after only about a quarter of the structure was built and was running more than $100 million over budget.

Carla Sledge was the county's former financial director and Steven Collins was the county's assistant corporation counsel, and both were indicted of two common law offences and two counts of willful neglect of duty.

The trial judge ordered proceedings in the case sealed, and further ordered that no one involved in the upcoming trial speak to reporters.

The Detroit Free Press protested and filed an action, arguing the orders were a violation of the constitutional right of freedom of speech. Following a hearing, the judge unsealed the proceedings but kept the gag order in place.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=152701&locid=1" }, joined by Judge Michael Gadola and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=190101&locid=1" }, held the gag order was an unconstitutional prior restraint on the freedom of the press.

In addition, it was unclear in its writing as to who might be considered a person participating in the trial, the appellate judges said. There are times when gag orders are permitted, the court held, but in this case the trial judge failed to meet the strict standards that would permit such an order.

Capital Notebook

WILDLIFE GRANTS: The Department of Natural Resources this week awarded $910,000 in grants for habitat improvement projects around the state.

The largest of the grants was $99,400 to the Michigan United Conservation Clubs for projects across the Lower Peninsula, followed by $81,095 for projects in Crawford and Oscoda counties.

The grants are funded with hunting and fishing license revenue.

CARDIAC CATHETERIZATION: Following adoption of new certificate of need standards, the Department of Health and Human Services has designated Accreditation for Cardiovascular Excellence and Corazon, Incorporated as the two accrediting bodies for cardiac catheterization services in the state.

ACTIVE SHOOTER: With the recent spate of mass shootings around the country, the Michigan Occupational Health and Safety Administration is participating in an active shooter training seminar hosted by the Delta College School of Criminal Justice.

"This training will focus on helping organizations develop strategies for effective crisis management to prepare for, manage, and recover from the aftermath of workplace violence, traumatic accidents, fatalities and workplace emergencies," the agency said in an email announcing the free training.

LANSING, Mich. – Free water filters will be available to current Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients and Flint residents at four locations beginning Tuesday, October 6, at 9 a.m. through a partnership between the MDHHS and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. Free National Sanitation Foundation certified water filters are being provided to Flint residents as part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area.

Current MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location to obtain a free, certified home water filter. Residents who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department offices located at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw in Flint. Staff will be onsite at all four locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

"Ensuring that families in the Flint area have access to resources that will help reduce the potential for lead exposure is our top priority," said Nick Lyon, director of the MDHHS. "I want to thank our partners who have mobilized to make water filters available – a point that highlights the importance of continued collaboration at the local, state and federal level as we move forward."

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active Family Independence Program (FIP), Food Assistance Program (FAP), Child Development and Care (CDC), State Disability Assistance (SDA), or Social Security Insurance (SSI) recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office to receive their filter free of charge. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their water bill to the GCCARD location.

Although blood lead levels throughout the city of Flint have remained steady, last week, MDHHS data was found to be consistent with a recent Hurley Children's Hospital study indicating increased blood lead levels in children residing in two Flint ZIP codes after a 2014 change in water source. While lead paint remains the number one cause of lead poisoning in Michigan, the recent data prompted MDHHS to take action to reduce potential lead exposures through water sources.

MDHHS is urging parents in Flint and throughout the state to do their part in preventing elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information about steps you can take now, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and available resources, visit www.michigang.gov/flintwater.

LANSING, Mich. – Flint residents and Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients with a city of Flint water bill will now be able to take advantage of extended hours this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department 2727 Lippincott location. Extended hours will be offered at the Lippincott facility only, and will run until 7 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, and from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday. The other three locations will maintain 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. operating hours, Monday through Friday, for filter pick up.

Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive, reemphasized that the Brita SAFF-100 filters being distributed by the department and GCCARD do meet the NSF/ANSI 53 standards for drinking water treatment units.

“The Brita faucet filtration system that we are distributing to residents are National Sanitation Foundation certified to reduce lead in drinking water,” said Dr. Eden Wells. “When connected appropriately, these filters improve water quality by filtering out contaminates including lead, chlorine, benzene and other chemicals.”

Since Monday when MDHHS announced that free water filters would be distributed at four Flint locations, the state and GCCARD have partnered to issue approximately 5,000 free NSF certified water filters to residents that are on the city of Flint water system. The distribution of filters is part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area. These NSF certified water filters remove lead in the water administered through water taps in homes.

MDHHS clients and residents with a city of Flint water bill may take advantage of the extended hours at the Lippincott GCCARD. During the regular business hours, MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location; residents on Flint water who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the GCCARD offices at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw. Staff will be onsite at all four locations to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their city of Flint water bill to a GCCARD location.

MDHHS is urging all residents do their part to prevent elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information on prevention, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and resources, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Volume #54, Report #199 -- Wednesday, October 7, 2015

House OKs Medical Marijuana Shops, Edibles

Medical marijuana patients would pay a 9 percent tax on the drug, but would be allowed to purchase it from a licensed dispensary and be permitted to use topical or edible forms of the drug legally under bills approved by the House Wednesday.

The bills, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB420901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB421001" }, cleared the House with huge margins, 95-11 and 96-10, respectively, after months of negotiations.

HB 4209 outlines an entirely new regulatory structure that includes five different types of licenses for growers, processors, testing labs, secure transporters and dispensaries. Local communities would have to pass their own ordinances allowing provisioning centers.

Local governments would get a portion of the revenue from the taxes and be allowed to set up an annual licensing fee. The Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs will also set a licensing fee.

The bill would set a 3 percent excise tax on the provisioning center's profits along with the 6 percent sales tax patients would pay at point of sale.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284701&locid=1" } (R-Nashville) said he is confident the Senate will act on the legislation, as the workgroup negotiating the bills has included law enforcement since the beginning of this term. Mr. Callton said law enforcement opposition is what killed the bill in the final days of lame duck last term.

"They were more cooperative to come in because of the real possibility of legalization. They saw it happen in Colorado; they saw it happen in Washington; and they started saying, 'It's not a matter of if, it's a matter of when,'" he said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge), chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said he expects to take up and report the legislation. But he said he did not support reducing the excise tax to 3 percent from 8 percent.

"I think that was a mistake and we'll revisit that ... because there has to be enough money to make everything work right," he said. "I'm going to make sure that Michigan State Police, the sheriffs and the prosecutors are on board, so I may have to tighten it up a little bit, but I do anticipate passing the bills."

Mr. Callton said legislative Democrats wanted to see the tax reduced. He said the fee to get a medical marijuana card has produced excess revenue for the state and he believes the tax would "more than" pay for the regulations.

Under the bill, the excise tax would disappear if medical marijuana is legalized. Mr. Callton said if the drug is legalized in the state, he would like to see medical marijuana go tax free.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=274601&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor), who did not support the 8 percent excise tax, voted yes on the bills Wednesday. He said they were imperfect, but workable.

The legislation stipulates LARA would be tasked with promulgating rules to implement and enforce the act. The department would also set certain standards, including the minimum levels of insurance operators must carry and testing, qualifications and limits for those who operate facilities.

The bill also would regulate quality, chain of custody, chemical storage, transport and storage. A five-member board would also be created to deal with licensing.

HB 4209 would restrict marketing geared toward minors and, under an amendment approved Wednesday, would bar edible marijuana products from taking a shape that would be attractive to minors.

HB 4210 would allow use of non-smokeable forms of the drug, but would prohibit butane extraction in a residential area.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=284201&locid=1" } (R-Alto), sponsor of the bill, said the package is not about whether someone is for or against marijuana or even medical marijuana. She said it is about getting the most effective form of treatment to patients, especially children and elderly who likely cannot smoke.

"This is not a criminal justice issue, this is a health issue, and even more it's a moral issue," she said on the House floor. "Put yourself in these peoples' place. What would you do if it was your child?"

The third and final bill in the package, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB482701" } , which passed 99-7, would create a seed-to-sale tracking system.

The Michigan Cannabis Development Association praised the passage of the legislation, calling it a historic step toward protecting patients and providing a clear framework for businesses.

"Michigan businesses committed to serving our patients and upholding the highest standards applaud the House for ending seven years of chaos and confusion that have affected patients, caregivers, local communities and law enforcement," Willie Rochon, MCDA secretary, said in a statement. "Michigan is now in position to have one of the strongest, most responsible medical marijuana frameworks in the nation that will promote accountability, transparency and safety. Once signed into law, these safeguards will provide tremendous relief and certainty to patients while eliminating the bad actors who put people and communities at risk."

Mr. Callton said he has been working on the issue for four and a half years and feels good about its passage.

"It's a step toward acceptance of medical marijuana for certain classes of patients," he said.

Mr. Callton also noted the issue has brought both libertarians and liberals together. He said those who have committed against new taxes voted yes on the medical marijuana legislation, including the tax. He said Democrats lobbied for a decrease in the excise tax.

"We saw a lot of things flipped on their head here," he said.

Forfeiture Changes Clear Senate

The Senate unanimously on Wednesday passed a package of bills overhauling how law enforcement uses civil asset forfeiture support.

The forfeiture legislation ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB449901" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB450001" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB450301" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB450401" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB450501" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB450601" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB450701" }) was last taken up at the end of August in the Senate Judiciary Committee (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=541630103" }) but saw few changes.

The bills impose reporting requirements on law enforcement agencies for all forfeitures to increase transparency and raise the evidentiary standard for drug forfeiture and public nuisances from the current "preponderance of evidence" to "clear and convincing."

Holly Harris, executive director for Fix Forfeiture - a coalition that includes the American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan and Americans for Tax Reform, among others - applauded the passage of the legislation that will now head to { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } for his signature.

"It is said that sunshine is the best disinfectant and today the Michigan Senate put a bright light on their state's civil asset forfeiture procedure, which will go a long way in protecting innocent property owners," she said in a statement. "Now the state will have a uniform reporting system, bringing transparency and ultimately fairness to the process."

And Jason Pye, director of justice reform at FreedomWorks and partner with Fix Forfeiture, said in a statement that the package was "grounded in common sense."

"The reforms will offer significant protections to innocent property owners from government overreach and bring much-needed transparency to the process," he said.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" } (R-Grand Ledge), chair of Judiciary, said he will continue to work on the issue as supporters say more reforms need to be made to asset forfeiture laws. And he defended law enforcement, which came under heavy criticism for abusing the civil asset forfeiture process.

"I think if they're given adequate direction, they will do their job appropriately," he said.

Mr. Jones also brushed off criticism that the police just have a profit motive.

"It's always easy to throw rocks at law enforcement. You could say they're writing too many tickets because there's a profit motive," Mr. Jones said. "I think for the most part, the average police officer or sheriff deputy wants to go out and do their job to the best of their ability, and they're not in it for profit."

MCOLES: The chamber also passed a package of bills codifying the Michigan Commission on Law Enforcement Standards (MCOLES), and prescribed the powers and duties of that commission.

All the bills in the package ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB9201" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB9301" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB9401" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB9501" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB9601" }) saw unanimous approval.

The bills put into statute MCOLES, created long ago under a governor's executive order, and update and consolidate various statutes and executive orders currently governing their operation.

"The commission ... is responsible for setting professional standards for law enforcement officers, creating curriculum for law enforcement training, licensing law enforcement officers and administering the Justice Training Fund and training to locals fund," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=83401&locid=1" } (R-Lawton), the primary sponsor of the package, said on the Senate floor. "Perhaps now more than ever, it is important to ensure that our law enforcement officers are held to the highest standards and that they are qualified for the important work they do."

She also said the legislation would clearly define which individuals with law enforcement authority are licensed and regulated by MCOLES, and it also gives the commission the ability to "hold officers accountable when they violate the public trust."

Senate Panel Reports Retired Teacher Legislation

After some initial hesitation about allowing retired teachers with a background in subjects that have a critical teacher shortage to serve as substitutes, the bill cleared the committee with unanimous support and an S-5 substitute.

The substitute to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB405901" } would re-enact, until July 1, 2018, expired provisions that allowed a public school retiree to work in an area identified as a critical shortage discipline as a substitute teacher, instructional coach or school improvement facilitator without losing his or her pension. Until that time, the reporting unit in a critical shortage area at which a retiree was hired would be required to pay 100 percent of the contribute rates for unfunded actuarial accrued liability for retiree health care and pension for that employment.

In order to be hired back, a person would have to have retired between June 30, 2010, and September 1, 2015. A retired individual (as of after June 30, 2010) who was rehired back and met certain conditions would have to forfeit his or her pension and health care benefits for the entire month in which he or she was re-employed by a reporting unit.

And the Department of Education must post a listing of critical shortage disciplines on its website.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=80001&locid=1" } (R-Troy) raised some concern as to why an individual who retired would go back to work, namely on a full-time basis, but a teacher from Saginaw ISD said if there was a need to service multiple schools for one discipline, especially during a time of shrinking budgets for schools, that might be a district's only option.

The S-5 substitute was adopted with unanimous approval, and the bill was reported similarly.

INTERIM CERTIFICATIONS: Without any discussion, the committee also reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB49101" }

(the S-2 version it had adopted at previous meeting), which allows the board of a school district or ISD to hire a non-certificated, non-endorsed teacher to teach a course in writing, journalism or health sciences, or a course in a discipline designated as a critical shortage discipline.

More specifically, an individual's service as a full-time instructor in a field of specialization at the college level would be considered occupation experience in that field of specialization.

The bill also requires an alternative teaching program, for an interim teaching certificate, to include training in classroom management, and it eliminates the grade point average requirement for those holding a master's or doctorate degree from a regionally accredited college or university in order to receive an interim teaching certificate.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=308601&locid=1" } (D-Dearborn Heights) registered the sole vote in opposition of the bill.

HIGH SCHOOL ECONOMICS: The committee also discussed but did not report a bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB439001" }) that would allow the half-credit economics requirement for a high school diploma to be satisfied by completion of a one-half credit course in personal economics.

"What I'm seeking to do is not only bring greater awareness for financial literacy, but also to allow more flexibility for our students," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=353601&locid=1" } (R-Clarkston), sponsor of HB 4390.

Several members of the committee expressed an interest in making such a course a requirement rather than an elective, but Mr. Tedder greeted that idea with caution.

"I think it's critical we allow flexibility," he noted.

ONLINE PROTECTION: The committee also began taking testimony on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB51001" }, which would create the Student Online Personal Protection Act to establish certain prohibitions and requirements that would apply to an operator of an Internet website, online service, online application or mobile application with actual knowledge that the site, service or application is used primarily for K-12 purposes.

Such an "operator" would be prohibited from knowingly engaging in certain targeted advertising, using information gathered by the operator to amass a student profile or selling a student's information. They would also be prohibited from knowingly disclosing covered information - or personally identifiable information or material in any media format - unless the disclosure was made for certain purposes.

"My intent is to be able to protect the kids in our educational system. We're gathering more and more data on our kids and I don't think the opportunity to sell this data should be possible," {

HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-St. Clair), the committee chair and sponsor of the bill, said. "We need to make sure this doesn't go too far and become an enterprise."

Advisory Committee Recommends Returning Flint To Detroit Water

An advisory committee reviewing the water situation in Flint has recommended that the city return to the Detroit Water and Sewerage Department as part of an effort to resolve lead and other contamination issues in the city.

In a tweet, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said he would make an announcement regarding the Flint water system although he did not offer any detail as to the details of that announcement.

The city moved to taking water from the Flint River last year in an effort to cut costs, but residents initially complained about taste and clarity and recent tests have shown increased blood lead levels in some areas of the city.

"Reconnecting to the Detroit water system is the right next step if it restores confidence among Flint residents about the quality of drinking water. The lead levels reported in Flint's water are unacceptable and Flint residents deserve access to safe water," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=306801&locid=1" } (D-Flint), a key proponent of returning to Detroit water, said in a statement.

"However, reconnecting to Detroit does not entirely solve the problem," Mr. Kildee said. "The state's previous decision to go to the Flint River source, and the corrosive nature of its water, could have already done permanent damage to the city's water distribution system. Flint's infrastructure, already aging and in need of repair, very well likely needs major investments."

Mr. Walling said last week that returning to Detroit water was on the table as an option, but, given the $1 million monthly price tag, would likely require state assistance (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=541960101" }).

Mr. Snyder at the time committed to a one-time $1 million grant, but not to any long-term assistance on the issue.

Michigan Radio quoted members of the advisory panel saying the switch back would take at least two weeks to complete.

House Appropriations Considers Regulating Large-Scale Dog Breeders

Large-scale dog breeding kennels with 15 intact female dogs used for breeding would be regulated in the state under a bill in the House Appropriations Committee, but members were concerned the $25 fee in the legislation was not high enough and that breeders would not register with the state.

Under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB489801" } , large-scale breeders would be required to register with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and pay a $25 fee. However, James Averill, state veterinarian, said the fee is not enough for the department to do inspections.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=316901&locid=1" } (R-Bloomfield Hills), sponsor of the bill, said the bill is essentially a consumer protection measure. He said people buy puppies, with cash, for hundreds or thousands of dollars and won't find out until later if there are genetic defects.

"You only have to set one foot in those facilities and you know it's wrong," he said. "There's no gray area that gets in the way of our action. What's happening in those places is disgusting, unethical and inhumane. It has to stop."

The idea is to eventually inspect the facilities, so members wanted to see the fee at least cover that service. Under the current bill, inspections would be complaint-based rather than annual.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville), chair of the committee, noted that passing legislation to increase a fee is usually difficult.

He also said in a statement released later that the existence of "puppy mills" is a result of public demand for good family pets, but a lack of oversight and regulation only exacerbates existing problems with overpopulation and conditions for those animals who are not adopted into a loving home.

"We need to think of unadopted or otherwise homeless dogs, cats, or other domestic animals from the perspective of their potential to be a pet in our homes," he said. "The difference between the ones on the streets and the ones in these mills isn't a big one, and the one thing they definitely both have in common is that they're better off in a loving family than in conditions like these. We have a moral imperative to act."

Vicki Deisner, legislative director for the Midwest region with the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said the fee in Ohio is $100.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276301&locid=1" } (R-Clayton) said the Legislature had to increase fees for the Agriculture department this budget year because the fees were not covering the services from the department.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=274601&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) said he thinks the large breeders would simply not register with the state.

The bill does not have an incentive to register with the state, but there is a $1,000 fee per violation for those are caught not registering, Mr. Averill said.

Currently, the department is neutral on the bill, but those with the department said they are confident they can get to a position of support.

The bill would also require a breeder to wait until a puppy is eight weeks old before adopting it out, or it would be required to adopt it out with the mother. The bill also limits each facility to 50 intact females.

Ms. Deisner said 30 other states regulate large-scale breeders. She said when neighboring states pass large-scale breeding regulations, some breeders who do not want to comply will move to states without the regulations.

"With Michigan now surrounded by states with regulations, you could see an influx of breeders from Ohio and other Midwest states who want to operate without oversight," she said.

She said dogs from large-scale breeders, like one in Lake City, have a variety of problems including behavioral and health issues. At the breeders found and shut down in Lake City, the dogs lived in poor environmental conditions and did not have food or clean water, she said.

The committee did not act on the bill, but will bring it up again next week.

Natural Resources Gets Back To Aquatic Invasive Species

A local government would be able to adopt an ordinance to prevent, control or eradicate aquatic invasive species in waters within the its boundaries and impose fees if an aquatic invasive species were present in the waters under legislation discussion by the Senate Natural Resources Committee on Wednesday.

The fees collected - which could be for invasive species prevention, control or eradication; using a boat launch or boat washing station; or parking a motor vehicle and trailer used to haul a boat - would be required to be deposited in a restricted fund for expenditure on aquatic invasive species prevention, control and eradication.

And while most who testified on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB10401" } were supportive of its provisions, the Department of Natural Resources took no position on the bill as written, stating that while it can appreciate the intent behind the bill, it does not want to discourage boaters from using any of Michigan's numerous inland lakes.

The ordinance could not impose fees totaling more than $10 per boat per day or $45 per boat per year, a Senate Fiscal Agency analysis of the bill states. And the ordinance would have to exempt a pesticide applicator, lake management consultant, or other person engaged in aquatic invasive species management activities from payment of a fee, as well as a government entity or a nonprofit organization.

The DNR also had questions about how the bill would be enforced if it did in fact become law.

But members of the Michigan Waterfront Alliance and the Michigan Aquatic Managers Association said something needs to happen sooner rather than later.

"We've been concerned about the members of Michigan living around the lakes having to bear the brunt of the invasive species war," said Bob Frye, president of the group. "It's very challenging when you have a number of public launch sites at our different lakes and the public contributing to the problem, but the public not given a chance to confront the problem."

Questions arose over how much of a fee would be appropriate and in what manner but to no consensus.

The Michigan Townships Association, Michigan Association of Counties and Michigan Municipal League were among supporters of the bill, as was the Michigan Environmental Council (though the latter said more needed to be done to figure out how to get more funds to the table to address the issue overall).

The committee did not report the bill.

LIQUID INDUSTRIAL BY-PRODUCT: The committee did, however, report three bills related to changing liquid industrial by-product laws to bring them up to speed with federal laws. S-1 substitutes making mostly technical changes were adopted to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB40001" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB40101" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB40201" }.

The bills would refer to what is now liquid industrial waste instead as liquid industrial by-product instead, and exclude from the classification of such a material that is used or reused as an ingredient to make a product and meets certain criteria otherwise.

The bills also eliminate a requirement that a generator of liquid industrial by-product use a site identification number when necessary for transportation and pay the Department of Environmental Quality a $50 fee for deposit into the Environmental Pollution Prevention Fund for each number the generator uses.

SB 400, specifically, also allows required records and documents to be maintained in an electronic format and allows a transporter to dispose of septage waste or liquid industrial by-product on land if authorized by the DEQ.

The department, at the last committee hearing, was in support of the legislation, and the bills were reported Wednesday with unanimous approval.

State Pays DeBoer, Rowse Attorneys $1.9M

The price of the state of Michigan's defense of its now nullified prohibition on same-sex marriage is $1.9 million.

On Wednesday, the state completed payment to the attorneys for April DeBoer and Jayne Rowse, the lesbian couple from Hazel Park who challenged the state's limitation of marriage to couples of the opposite sex. The U.S. Supreme Court, ruling on their case and others, struck down such laws and held that gay couples have the right to marry.

The attorneys had filed during the summer for $1.9 million in attorneys fees. On Wednesday, both the plaintiffs' attorneys and the Department of Attorney General agreed to stipulate in the U.S. District Court that they had agreed to dismiss the motion on attorneys fees.

Carole Stanyar, one of the plaintiffs' attorneys in the case, said the total cost of the case was between $2 million to $3 million. They did not bill the state for costs and some attorneys fees. Donors picked up the rest.

Andrea Bitely, spokesperson for the Department of Attorney General, said the department had no comment on resolution of the legal fees matter.

Supporters of allowing same-sex couples to marry had heavily criticized { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } for deciding to defend the state's limitation on marriage in court. Officials in other states decided not to defend their bans.

Commission Urges Cautious Reaction To Sentencing Guidelines Ruling

The Criminal Justice Policy Commission will study the effects of a recent Supreme Court ruling that makes statutory sentencing guidelines advisory to trial judges, but it urged the Legislature to avoid, at least for now, trying to correct the ruling.

But the commission also recommended that sentencing guidelines be retained as a way to reduce disparities in sentencing.

The commission named making sanctions within the guidelines as one of its three top priorities for the coming months.

The guidelines ruling, in People v. Lockridge (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=541480102" }), was in line with recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings on guidelines, Solicitor General Aaron Lindstrom told the commission. In both rulings, the courts held that the statutory guidelines allowed factors to affect sentencing beyond the facts determined by the jury, which violates the Sixth Amendment right to trial by jury.

The result, Mr. Lindstrom said, was greater disparity in sentencing in federal courts since the first ruling in 2005. But he noted that the departures from the federal guidelines have tended to be downward, as federal judges rejected some of the lengthy sentences, particularly for drug crimes.

Mr. Lindstrom did not expect as much deviation from the state guidelines, which the Michigan Supreme Court said judges would still have to consider. "I think people have more of a perception that the state guidelines are more where they should be," he said, though he added the burden would be high for a defendant, or a prosecutor, to show that a sentence was improper.

"I don't think that the reasonableness test is going to lead to overturning many decisions," he said.

Though in its second recommendation for Wednesday it urged maintaining guidelines as a way to ensure some consistency in sentencing, the commission still, in its first recommendation, called on the Legislature to do nothing for now. Rather, the commission said it would track sentencing patterns in the wake of the ruling and make future recommendations based on that data.

As part of the commission's charge to review sentencing, members will be working through the recent recommendations from the Council of State Governments to the Law Revision Commission.

Among the first of the seven CSG findings the commission will tackle is that the guidelines should be structured to produce more consistent sentencing.

CSG had recommended that the state narrow the cells in the guidelines to provide more narrow sentencing recommendations based on the score for a particular conviction.

While commission members agreed there was some need for consistency, they also argued for some room for trial judges to make decisions based on the particular case and local conditions.

Tied to that, the commission will be discussing CSG's finding 6, that the state has to monitor sentencing practices.

To do that, commission members said, the state is going to have to provide the commission with some funds for staff.

Several commissioners argued the state also needs to create a new sentencing commission to meet the federal guidelines ruling. "I don't know if the Court of Appeals is going to say our guidelines are reasonable when they haven't been updated since 1998," St. Joseph Circuit Judge Paul Stutesman said.

Barbara Levine said the policy commission was charged with determining whether the guidelines are proper.

Former Sen. Bruce Caswell, chair of the commission, said discussions on funding for the commission were happening behind the scenes, but he urged members to come together on some of the recommendations that might involve funding quickly if they are to be factored into the 2016-17 budget.

The commission will also be discussing the recommendation that the state concentrate its funding on programs that reduce recidivism.

But that will first require setting a definition for recidivism, Kent County Sheriff Larry Stelma said.

The state also needs to find ways to better track services provided to inmates after they are released. Both Kyle Kaminski with the Department of Corrections and Andrew Verheek with the Michigan Association of Community Corrections Advisory Boards said there currently is little tracking of people who switch between state and county corrections systems.

Mr. Kaminski said the responsibility lies with the counties.

"We're responsible for them while they're placed under our supervision, but they're not our people, they the community's people," he said.

Mr. Verheek said many counties do not have the capacity to collect the data the commission will need.

Sheryl Kubiak, who represents the Michigan Coalition to End Domestic and Sexual Violence on the commission, said the commission's recommendation also has to touch on implementation of the programs.

"The department and community corrections have looked at the programs and have for the most part tried to bring those programs to Michigan," Ms. Kubiak said. "It's in the implementation. ... It's not just here's an evidence-based program."

MEETING TIMES: It was unclear at the end of Wednesday's meeting whether the commission might change its regular meeting times. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161801&locid=1" } (D-Highland Park) urged a change to avoid conflicting with Senate session.

Mr. Johnson said he would have liked to comment on some of the commission's recommendations, but had to leave for session before voting began.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township), who joined the meeting after session (Mr. Johnson did not return), said the meeting times were fine for him and he would ask to have some committee meetings adjusted to avoid the commission meetings.

Committee Continues Discussion On Safety Flag For Towing Watercraft

The Department of Natural Resources said Wednesday it is neutral on a bill that would require personal watercraft with individuals in tow to display a flag to help others operating vessels in the water know to keep a look out.

The House Regulatory Reform Committee held its second meeting on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB453401" } Wednesday and did not report the legislation.

The department said it was neutral because there are both positives and negatives associated with the legislation.

Trevor VanDyke, legislative liaison with the department, said some believe the bright colored flag will help, while others believe it could actually distract a boater from looking at the water.

Mr. VanDyke also told the committee anyone born in 1996 or after is required to take a boater safety course before operating a vessel.

Nicki Polan, executive director with the Michigan Boating Industry Association, said if passed, the new requirement could deter those interesting in boating from doing so, as it is another regulation.

MMA AND BOXING REGULATIONS: The committee also took up a pair of bills regulating professional boxing, professional or amateur mixed martial arts or similar "unarmed combat."

The responsibilities of the Michigan Unarmed Combat Commission are revised in { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15201" }, and that commission, alongside the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, would have jurisdiction over all boxing or MMA contests. The legislation also revises and establishes new regulations concerning the conduct of the events, as well as revises fee amounts for licenses to have such events.

Among the regulations are ensuring a contestant has been drug tested and having an on-site inspector. Women would also be required to submit a negative pregnancy test before competitions.

The committee did not vote on SB 152 or { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15401" }, but will next week, said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=219701&locid=1" } (R-Onekama), chair of the committee.

PSC Opens Natural Gas Safety Inquiry

As Public Service Commission staff have become aware of a number of gas service lines servicing residential or commercial gas customers connected directly to gas storage field, transmission pipelines, regulated and unregulated gathering lines, oil and gas wells, and gas processing facilities, the commission has opened an inquiry into gas safety issues.

The inquiry on natural gas distribution utilities, gas gathering or transmission pipeline operators and gas storage system operators seeks to determine three major points:

- The number and locations or residences or other structures receiving gas under the same or similar circumstances as previously outlined;
- The specific type of interconnection and source of gas for each connection to a residence or other structure; and
- The safety equipment currently installed at each connection.

The connections often occur when the pipeline or storage field operator provides natural gas to a property owner in exchange for paying for a right-of-way or easement across the property, the PSC said in a statement, and such facilities may not be compliant with the Michigan Gas Safety Standards.

Providers will have until December 1 to submit their responses to questions in the table in attachment two of the order (case U-17585), and providers that do not have connections as described in the order shall respond by indicating so, the PSC said.

ALPENA POWER COMPANY: The PSC on Wednesday also approved a settlement agreement authorizing Alpena Power Company to implement its 2016-17 energy optimization plan resulting in a decrease of 7 cents a month on the bills of residential customers using 500 kilowatt-hours of electricity a month, effective January 2016 (case { HYPERLINK "http://efile.mpsc.state.mi.us/efile/viewcase.php?casenum=17770&submit.x=0&submit.y=0" \t "blank" }).

Johnson Announces Funds Double Prior Candidates

Lon Johnson, the former Michigan Democratic Party chair running for the 1st U.S. House District, announced Wednesday on Twitter that he had raised more than $350,000 in the most recent quarter.

Mr. Johnson, who is challenging former Kalkaska County Sheriff Jerry Cannon for the Democratic nomination in the seat, posted a graphic that showed Mr. Cannon had raised only $130,000 during his first quarter as an announced candidate for the 2014 election. For third quarter of 2013, Mr. Cannon reported $130,390 and reported $104,495 on hand (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=522040102" }).

The graphic showed Mr. Johnson had also raised more than Gary McDowell in his second bid against { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=246701&locid=1" } (R-Crystal Falls) in 2012. The graphic showed Mr. McDowell brought in $156,000 during that first announced quarter. Mr. McDowell reported raising $156,674 during third quarter of 2011, with $154,213 cash on hand (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=502040103" }).

Quarterly reports are due October 15.

Former Rep. Dingell To Remain In Hospital For A Little Longer

Former U.S. Rep. John Dingell remained hospitalized Wednesday after undergoing a heart event that physicians told him was not a heart attack.

As usual, Mr. Dingell, the longest-serving member of Congress in American history, leavened the situation with humor on Twitter.

"It wasn't a heart attack, but doctors are recommending I do all I can to try to forget the end of that Lions game," he said. "Here for a few more days."

On Tuesday, upon declaring he was in the hospital, Mr. Dingell lamented, "Being old sucks."

Physicians determined it was not a heart attack after Mr. Dingell underwent an angiogram Wednesday at Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=190901&locid=1" } (D-Dearborn), Mr. Dingell's wife, said via her Facebook page that Mr. Dingell would undergo a procedure on Friday "for some new equipment" with the exact kind still under discussion.

"John Dingell is one tough SOB and he said to tell you he is a tough old Pollack who is going to be around to keep rascality under control for awhile more," she said. "He is feisty as ever, asking a ton of questions, with lots advice for everyone including me on what we have to do for the health care system."

Court Orders Hearings On Village Military Bias Question

A ruling for Vicksburg that it did not discriminate against a police officer because of his military service was reversed by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Wednesday and ordered returned for more proceedings.

In making the decision, Judge Raymond Kethledge, joined by Judge Ralph Guy Jr. and Judge Jane Branstetter Stranch, said there was evidence that Vicksburg village officials had acted against David Eichaker because he was active in the military reserves. The court ruled in Eichaker v. Vicksburg ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.ca6.uscourts.gov/opinions.pdf/15a0677n-06.pdf" \t "blank" }).

Mr. Eichaker sued the village after he had been denied the post of chief of police, and then the new chief demoted him first from lieutenant to a sergeant and then a patrol officer. Mr. Eichaker said the factor that seemed to turn the village officials against him was his service in the military reserves which included a tour in Afghanistan.

He sued under the federal Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act. The U.S. District Court for Western Michigan granted summary judgment to the village.

But the federal appeals panel held that in looking at the evidence there was ample evidence to suggest that Mr. Eichaker was subjected to bias because of his military activities, including comments made by the village president in a closed meeting to select a new chief, that Mr. Eichaker should not be selected because he had a young family and was focused on his military career.

Revenue Bulletin Defines Total Household Income, Refers To Same-Sex Couples

A newly released state revenue administrative bulletin defines total household income in relationship to the state's Homestead Property Tax Credit and home heating credit. But the document is one of the first state documents to refer to same-sex couples.

The bulletin, RAB 2015-18, outlines all forms of income received by persons in a household - including wages, salaries, tips, Social Security payments, business income, alimony and prize winnings - and defines what constitutes a household.

Household is defined as a claimant and the claimant's spouse. The bulletin also says the claimant must have resided in the state for at least six months.

The bulletin also said, "The terms spouse, husband and wife include individuals lawfully married to a person of the same sex whether married in Michigan or another state."

The couple has to include all their income if they are required to file joint returns, even if they live separately, and if they live together in the same residence even if they file tax returns separately.

Capital Notebook: State Has Spent $4M On Advertising Healthy Michigan

In response to legislation proposed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=83401&locid=1" } (R-Lawton) to prohibit state departments from advertising the Healthy Michigan (expanded Medicaid) program, a spokesperson with the Department of Health and Human Services said the state funded $2 million in fiscal year 2014 and the same in fiscal year 2015 to advertise the program to "reach and engage target populations so we can improve health outcomes in Michigan."

Ms. Schuitmaker, speaking to Gongwer News Service on Tuesday, said she introduced her legislation, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB54201" }, because "the Medicaid expansion surpassed the expectations, and here we are spending more and more money to get people more and more dependent upon government," she said (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=541980111" }).

Although the department did not give a specific statement on the bill itself, it defended its use of appropriated funds for the program that has provided health care to some 600,000 residents as a provision of the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

"When we initially rolled out the Healthy Michigan Plan, we knew how important it was to provide residents with clear, consistent information that would make the enrollment process as smooth as possible for applicants," Jennifer Eisner, spokesperson for DHHS, said in a statement to Gongwer. "In talking to our partners, we know that continued public education efforts play a vital role in ensuring eligible residents are not only getting coverage, but also understanding how to use it to improve their health."

Ms. Schuitmaker's bill was sent to the Senate Health Policy Committee.

VETERANS HOMES: Leslie Shanlian has been appointed chief executive officer of the Michigan Veteran Health System, which oversees the state's two veterans homes.

Ms. Shanlian, who takes the post October 26, is a licensed nursing home administrator. She was most recently deputy director of the Aging and Adult Services Agency.

"Leslie has a proven track record of serving Michigan's aging residents and their families, and we are excited to have that level of expertise in the Michigan Veteran Health System," Jeff Barnes, director of the Veterans Affairs Agency, which houses the veterans homes, said. "Her leadership during this transition will reinforce MVAA's core values of innovation, inclusion and customer service for the veterans who live in the homes and the staff who provide quality long-term care there."

CAPITOL MODILLIONS LOTTERY: The Michigan State Capitol Commission will conduct a lottery giving 100 winners the right to purchase one of the old modillions replaced as part of this year's restoration.

Those wishing to enter the lottery should contact Valerie Marvin at { HYPERLINK "mailto:vmarvin@legislature.mi.gov" \t "blank" } or by leaving a message at 517-373-2358.

The cost to purchase one of the old modillions is $100.

Entrants should include their name, preferred phone number, mailing address and e-mail address. Only one entry is allowed per person. Entries will be accepted from Tuesday, October 6, 2015, until midnight Friday, October 16, 2015.

A public drawing will select the 100 winners. It will be held at noon October 19 in Room H-65 of the Capitol. Entrants do not need to be present to win.

Snyder Asks Legislature For $6M To Reconnect Flint To Detroit Water

FLINT – Governor Rick Snyder said today that Flint will reconnect to the Detroit water system and no longer draw water for its residents and businesses from the Flint River, a move that comes in response to insufficient corrosion treatment for the river water causing unsafe levels of lead to leach into the water.

The announcement follows one of the most serious environmental crises to confront the state and a major outcry that Mr. Snyder's administration, and the man he appointed to run the city when it was in a financial emergency, failed to assure the river water – more corrosive than the water from Lake Huron, where the Detroit system draws its water – was properly treated before making the switch to the river. Testing has shown rising levels of lead in the blood of some children in the city and pockets of the city with lead levels in the water that exceed recognized limits for safety.

Mr. Snyder said it will cost $12 million to shift Flint to Detroit water through next summer, when a new pipeline to Lake Huron is expected to be completed to supply Flint and surrounding areas with its water. He said he is asking the Legislature to supply $6 million. The Mott Foundation will contribute $4 million and the city of Flint will chip in $2 million.

Gongwer News Service will have more on this story in today's Michigan Report.

Legislature To Move Quickly On Funding For Flint Water

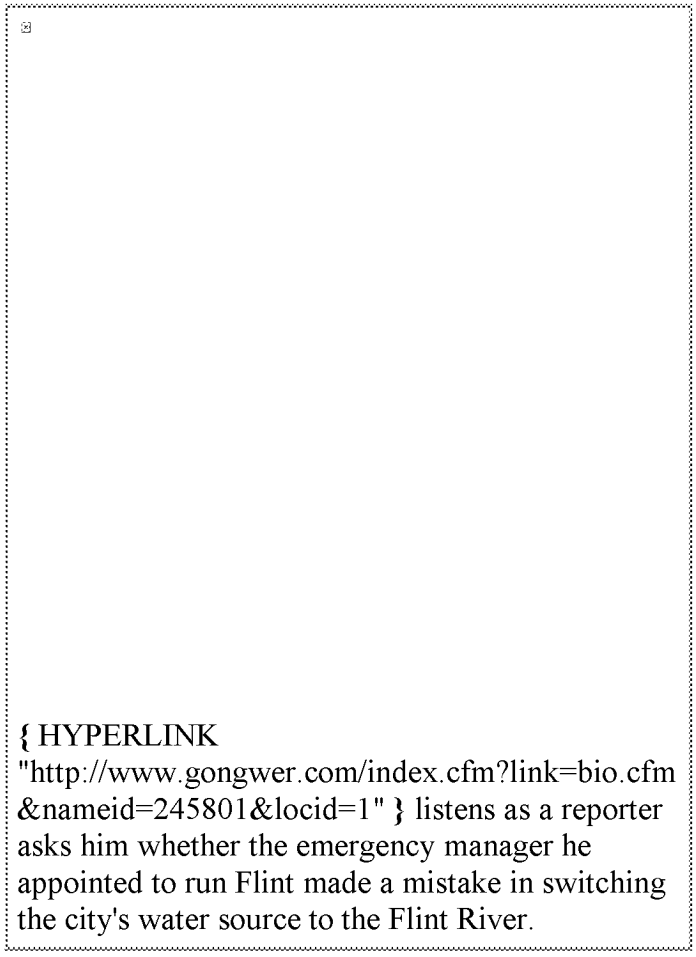
FLINT - Top legislative leaders immediately said Thursday they would support state funding to aid Flint's return to drawing water from the Detroit system and ending a disastrous move to pull water for the city from the Flint River.

Insufficient corrosion controls for water drawn from the river, which is inherently more corrosive than water drawn from Lake Huron, where the Detroit system draws its water, caused lead from the city's old service lines to leach into the water, leading to lead levels in the water exceeding the federal standard to trigger remediation and to elevated lead levels in the blood of some Flint children.

In an especially alarming finding, Department of Environmental Quality { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=303801&locid=1" } said Thursday that initial water screening at 13 Flint schools showed four of 37 samples exceeding the federal threshold on lead of 15 parts per billion that requires action to be taken. The four samples came from three different schools. One school's level hit as high as 101 parts per billion.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }, a day after a technical review board recommended the city return to using the Detroit water system, said he backed the city's decision no longer to use the Flint River and declared he would ask the Legislature for $6 million toward the $12 million cost to use the Detroit system until next summer. By then, the new pipeline for the regional Karegnondi Water Authority to draw water from Lake Huron should be completed.



{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } listens as a reporter asks him whether the emergency manager he appointed to run Flint made a mistake in switching the city's water source to the Flint River.

"It will be better for the citizens of Flint in terms of public safety, which is the paramount concern," Mr. Snyder said at a news conference. "This is a comprehensive next step to add to the steps we'd taken last week."

The Mott Foundation will contribute $4 million, and the city of Flint will contribute the remaining $2 million.

The calls for the state to cover some or all of the cost of switching water systems stemmed in large part because it was an emergency manager, whom Mr. Snyder appointed to run the city during a financial crisis, who made the decision to leave the Detroit system and use the Flint River as a way of saving almost $1.5 million a month to aid the city's troubled finances.

Officials said it would take about two weeks to make the change from drawing water from the river to the Detroit system.

"A switch back to Detroit water is the fastest way to protect public health and to stabilize Flint's water system," Flint Mayor Dayne Walling said.

Mr. Snyder also is calling for about $3.5 million to pay for additional state staff in Flint schools (Health and Human Services to gauge exposure to lead, DEQ to handle evaluation and protocols on drinking water, and Licensing and Regulatory Affairs to assist with plumbing engineers). The funding also would support testing and evaluating the water and continuing to supply residents with filters to screen out lead.

Even after the Detroit system begins supplying water, it can take up to six months for the corrosion controls to take full effect, Mr. Wyant said.

House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant) said the situation is a "serious public health crisis," and the state must act.

"It is clear there is going to be a need for some money from the state, and I am supportive of that," he said.

Mr. Cotter said he did not know how quickly the House would approve funding, but termed the issue urgent.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville), the House Appropriations Committee chair, said he wants to act next week. There is a vehicle supplemental appropriations bill in the committee that would enable quick legislative passage, he said.

Mr. Pscholka said the move to switch water sources should have come sooner, and he voiced that to state officials. A week ago, Mr. Snyder announced several action steps that included distributing filters to residents, among other measures. He said then that switching to Detroit water was under consideration.

"I was not happy last week. I ran into some folks at the MSU game. Representative Neeley was there and Dan Wyant was there. ... and I voiced my opinion," Mr. Pscholka said, referring to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=358901&locid=1" } (D-Flint). "I just felt we needed to get this done and we needed a longer-term solution than what was being proposed last week. And I am glad to see we had some pretty quick response."

Amber McCann, spokesperson for Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive), said the Senate would likely take up the issue next week.

"It is a public health crisis and the Senate will work to help address that issue so there is safe drinking water for Flint," she said. "There's just some disagreement about where that money may come from."

Mr. Snyder said officials held off recommending a return to Detroit water because they wanted to analyze what the best decision would be. In the end, the change is the best move both in terms of water quality and restoring the confidence of Flint residents that their water is safe. Officials also were studying the logistics and cost involved in switching to Detroit water, he said.

"I thought it was best to listen to the scientists, the researchers that are doing this great work, and they confirmed that they believed it was the appropriate answer," he said. "It really was waiting for the data to really say this clearly was the best answer."

Mr. Snyder and Mr. Wyant were asked why the DEQ had not tested the drinking water in the schools. They said the state had followed the federal rule, which does not require it. But now the state will test the water in Flint schools and evaluate whether to make that a permanent endeavor.

Several praised the decision, but given the gravity of the situation, did so coolly and also said much more work remains to address the large number of lead components in the city's water infrastructure.

"I view this not as a victory for our community, but as a fix that is unfortunately necessary," said Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint).

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=306801&locid=1" } (D-Flint) called for Flint not to pay anything toward the switch.

"Flint is a financially distressed city, and it should not have to empty out its bank account to pay for the state's failures," he said in a statement. "The decision to switch to the Flint River water source was made while the city was under state emergency management, and now it is incumbent on Governor Snyder and the state to fix - and pay - for the problem they created. Flint paying anything for the problem that the state created in the first place means that other improvements, including to the city's aging water infrastructure system, could be delayed."

The Michigan Environmental Council called for testing all Flint children for lead exposure and for the state to study the feasibility of testing children statewide for lead. It also called for the state to require all local governments to determine which homes in their jurisdictions have lead service lines.

"The plan announced today to switch Flint back to Detroit for its drinking water supply is a positive step," said Andy McGlashen of the MEC in a statement. "But there's a lot more state leaders can do to resolve the crisis and make sure nothing like it ever happens again in Michigan."

Lynna Kaucheck, senior organizer for the group Food and Water Watch, said the switch should have come long ago after more than a year's worth of complaints about the water. Prior to the lead crisis, there were complaints of severe discoloration, foul taste and smells, and rashes.

In January, the city declared its treatment for bacteria in the water had led to an excessive level of a cancer-causing chemical in the water.

"Unfortunately the switch may come too late for some Flint children who will suffer a lifetime of consequences from having been poisoned by the high levels of lead in Flint's drinking water," Ms. Kaucheck said in a statement. "We can only hope that Governor Snyder and the Michigan Department of Environmental Quality learn from this tragedy."

Mr. Walling said the realization of children having elevated blood levels has been devastating to the Flint community.

"I could hardly sleep knowing that our youngest and most vulnerable children could be at greater risk if precautionary steps were not taken," he said.

Snyder, DEQ Under Heavy Scrutiny For Handling Of Flint Water Crisis

FLINT - { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said Friday he supports an "after-action report" to review how his administration, and others, responded to concerns about unsafe levels of lead in Flint's drinking water in the wake of heavy criticism that his Department of Environmental Quality downplayed worrisome data and reacted slowly to the situation.

There are several major lines of criticism against Mr. Snyder and his administration on their handling of Flint's water:

- The emergency manager Mr. Snyder appointed to run Flint during its financial emergency put finances before public safety when deciding to switch the city's water source from the Detroit system to the Flint River to save almost $1.5 million a month while awaiting the construction of a new regional system pipeline to Lake Huron;

- A DEQ spokesperson { HYPERLINK "http://michiganradio.org/post/leaked-internal-memo-shows-federal-regulator-s-concerns-about-lead-flint-s-water" \l "stream/0" \t "blank" } to Michigan Radio in July the importance of a leaked U.S. Environmental Protection Agency memo raising worries about lead in the water (Brad Wurfel told Michigan Radio, "anyone who is concerned about lead in the drinking water in Flint can relax");

- A Department of Health and Human Services spokesperson { HYPERLINK "http://www.mlive.com/news/flint/index.ssf/2015/09/state_says_its_data_shows_no_c.html" \t "blank" } data produced by Hurley Medical Center in Flint showing elevated levels of lead in children's blood (Angela Minicuci told The Flint Journal the state's data was more comprehensive and "much more accurate" than the Hurley data); and

- The DEQ's testing of water samples was inadequate.

"Right now I want to stay focused in on the solutions and taking actions to solve the problems," Mr. Snyder said when asked about the need to review what went wrong. "And then we'll go back and continue an analysis to say are there recommendations that'd we'd like to work with our federal partners ... to improve processes when you change water sources or are there ongoing things we should be looking at on a more frequent basis or who is being looked at."

Mr. Snyder did suggest many changes could be needed.

"I think it's clear there will be at least several recommendations that will be out there, both at the state level, the local level and the federal level on things that we could have potentially seen opportunities," he said. "I do want to credit people though for trying to work together to promptly resolve this as it was identified."

Both Mr. Snyder and DEQ { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=303801&locid=1" } said several times the state performed all the water tests required under the federal lead and copper rule. Both said one apparent hole is that nothing requires testing the water in schools, which Mr. Snyder said "probably should be something that could be corrected in the longer term."

Mr. Snyder also said officials "promptly found the resources" to switch the city back to Detroit water as soon as possible.

He did not answer a question about whether it was a mistake in 2014 for his appointed emergency manager to switch the water source to the Flint River. The state returned control of Flint city government to its elected officials earlier this year.

Mr. Wyant said the DEQ was testing the water in the system every six months for lead as required by federal rule. In December, the test showed 6 parts per billion. The next test showed 11 parts per billion. Under federal rule, having two consecutive tests means the community must be informed and the water system must increase its corrosion controls.

The letter advising Flint residents of the lead situation went out in August, Mr. Wyant said.

Mr. Wyant, in an interview, was asked if the DEQ should have been more circumspect in its public statements about the safety of the water.

"Yes," he said. "Lessons learned."

Of the DEQ's overall performance in the situation, Mr. Wyant said staff followed its consistent protocol and federal rule.

"They responded in a timely fashion," he said. "The real questions that we'll get to on this after-action review is what more should have happened and what more could have been done. We have to be open and honest that some changes will be necessary going forward."

As to why the Department of Health and Human Services initially downplayed the Hurley data, DHHS { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=392601&locid=1" } said initially the citywide data showed seasonal patterns.

"But as we dug into it and did figure out there was a statistical variation, we acted immediately and quickly, and that's why we took the action steps we did last week," he said.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said the DEQ "has a lot of work to do" when asked how it performed.

"I think they're internally looking at the mistakes that were made whether it's in communication or in following the procedures and protocols. They seem dedicated and I'm going to hold them to changing those policies going forward," he said. "There's no question that mistakes were made in the drinking water division of the Department of Environmental Quality and that needs to be looked at."

Mr. Ananich said the change in tone from the state in the past week will help after the initial response seemed combative.

"There's panic, there's anger, there's distrust," he said of the mood in the city. "Folks really want to know answers because they want to protect their family. Those answers are starting to come out now, and I think it's in a much more direct way. The mistakes of the past, where the lack of transparency and the lack of empathy and giving straight answers, that's (ending) now."

Flint City Councilmember Wantwaz Davis said the state's support for moving the city back to Detroit water corrects what had been a horrendous decision by Mr. Snyder's emergency manager to draw water from the Flint River.

He said he would give the state a B+ for its handling of the issue, mainly because of Thursday's decision to switch to Detroit water.

"Now it will give some form of sigh of relief to the kids and also to the elderly people who have compromised immune systems," he said. "Now they've gotten it right."

Bills Would Extend Community College Training Programs To ISDs

The House Workforce and Development Committee on Thursday discussed legislation allowing an intermediate school district to enter into an agreement with an employer in the state to train workers and recoup the costs in part through a diversion of income tax withholding from the new jobs.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB475001" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB475101" }, introduced by Rep. Phil Potvin (R-Cadillac) would extend the program that is currently seen between community colleges and employers in the state.

Mr. Potvin said there is "quite a gap" in the job market forming as those between 50 and 60 years old are starting to retire.

"We want to open that opportunity up, in particular where I am from in the 102nd District ... we have no community college within the area," he said. "When you've got a local industry, in particular in Cadillac we have 4,200 manufacturing jobs. ... What this will allow us to do is continue to create that opportunity."

Steve Locke, with the Mecosta Osceola Intermediate School District, said they often hear from employers that they need workers with a certain skill set.

He said the ISD currently has the facilities to train workers, but under current law they are traveling 50 or 60 miles from the area to the nearest community colleges for training.

"We think this is an awesome opportunity to reduce barriers for partnerships," he said.

Paul Galbenski, dean of the Oakland Schools Technical Campus northeast, said if enacted the bills would help ISDs strengthen relationships with local businesses and meet the needs of the local economy.

"It's an incredible economic development opportunity also for local employers to be able to get their employees trained," he said. "And it does provide multipurposing for our career and technical campus. We have these facilities and this would then help us spread the standing infrastructure cost over more buildings and provide more of those opportunities."

He said in career and technical programs the most costly portion is maintaining the equipment.

Under the bills, an ISD providing such could provide various services, including training or retraining for new jobs; adult basic education and job related instruction; development, readiness, and remedial education; and vocation and skill assessment services and testing.

An agreement between and ISD and an employer must provide for costs that may be pay from a new jobs credit from withholding, new employment resulting from the project or from tuition and fees.

The agreement must also contain an estimate of how many new jobs will be created by the employer; a provision that fixes on a quarterly basis the minimum amount of new jobs credit from withholding to be paid for program costs and if it is insufficient, the employer would agree to provide funds to make up the shortfall; and provide for the payment of an administrative fee in an amount equal to 15 percent of the agreement.

An ISD receiving money from employee withholding would file a quarterly report to the Department of Treasury under the legislation certifying the amount it received from each of its partners.

Annually, the ISD would be required to submit additional information to the department, including names of employers, amount of the withholding and other information.

The committee did not act on the bill.

DIFS Has Some Concerns With Insurance Code Changes

The first major update on of the state's health insurance laws in more than 20 years saw its first committee hearing Thursday, and the Department of Insurance and Financial Services has some concerns, but appears willing to work toward an agreement.

Gabe Basso with DIFS told the House Insurance Committee that the department does not yet have an official position on the bill. Mr. Basso then outlined the department's concerns to the committee.

"We have been working with stakeholders throughout this process and will continue to do so," he said.

The department had multiple concerns with the pending legislation, including various changes in the code to reflect federal changes, like a former requirement to have certain notices written in "plain English," but is now referred to as "culturally and linguistically appropriate."

Under the current drafts, a provision requiring the director to approve forms to ensure they are not misleading was changed so that the director would not have to approve the forms unless significantly changed from the previous form.

Mr. Basso said that appears subjective to the department and it would like the original provision to remain.

Teri Morante, with the department, also said it is looking to get 90 days in the bill to do its review of health plans. She said right now the department does it in 120 and has 16 people working overtime to get it done.

She said even 90 days is a stretch to do the review, but under the legislation the department would be required to do it in 60 days and it doesn't seem possible.

Dominick Pallone and Judy Hooyenga with the Michigan Association of Health Plans testified to the House Insurance Committee making its case as to why the package of bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB493301" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB493401" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB493501" }), designed to improve competition in the insurance industry and increase company flexibility in developing new products for consumers, is needed.

Mr. Pallone said the bills would allow the association to continue working with its partners, including local governments, DIFS and the Department of Health and Human Services on the Medicaid side, in new and innovative ways.

The bills would allow health maintenance organizations to offer administrative services organization plans without a financial risk. While currently many HMOs have separate administrative services organization businesses, they are not within the same network.

Ms. Hooyenga said under the changes in the bills, an HMO will be able to operate an administrative services organization and keep the same network, helping enrollees keep the same doctors.

HB 4934 would adopt National Association of Insurance Commissioners model, which would reduce conflicts when coordinating with national insurers out of state, Ms. Hooyenga said.

Other changes included in the bills are:

- Medicaid HMOs would still have to have a third of its governing board comprised of enrollees or representatives of membership, or they would have to create a consumer advisory board;

- An expedited process for approval of experimental drugs;

- Eliminating minimum dollar coverage for substance disorder services;

- Excluding coverage for illegal activities that include driving with an illegal blood alcohol level or operating a meth lab;

- Allowing delivery of documents electronically under certain conditions; and

- In the Patients Right Independent Review Act, the deadline for filing would change from 60 to 120 days.

Group Charges A.G.'s Office Pushes Excessive FOIA Fees

An organization that was asked to pay $52,000 to the Department of Treasury to obtain records its requested under the Freedom of Information Act charged that { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } was behind efforts to deny the public access to documents through "exorbitant fees for easily searchable documents."

A spokesperson for Mr. Schuette called the assertion absurd.

However, documents released by the liberal group Progress Michigan had to prove a bit embarrassing to state officials as items the Department of Treasury had intended to be redacted were actually readable. And those sections showed that instead of denying a request from Progress Michigan to obtain documents "per advice from the AG, the response carries a $52K fee. This may cause them to 'cry wolf.'"

Progress Michigan had requested documents from Treasury and other departments related to Paul Pastorek, education advisor to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }. After the group received the bill of $52,000, it filed an FOIA on how its initial FOIA request was handled.

Lonnie Scott, executive director of Progress Michigan, said documents indicate the Department of Attorney General was trying to price people out of documents that should be public.

The public has already paid for the documents requested, as they are produced by state workers whose salaries are paid for by the taxpayers, Mr. Scott said.

In fact, other departments did respond to the request and did not charge the organization, Mr. Scott said.

Progress Michigan was attempting to get information on why Mr. Snyder's administration moved school reform efforts from the Department of Education to Treasury.

In its initial response to the organization, the department said the request was overbroad. Requesting all documents would mean a minimum of two hours to check the documents of more than 1,200 department employees, Progress Michigan was told.

The request was later modified, but Mr. Scott said it was ridiculous to say every department worker would have to be checked because only a few workers would have had dealings with Mr. Pastorek. And in the end, Mr. Scott said, Treasury essentially asked of all workers that anyone who had documents referring to Mr. Pastorek to supply them.

The issue, Mr. Scott said, was whether Mr. Schuette or his department directed Treasury to call for the $52,000 fee. Reporters questioned if the documents specifically indicated the attorney general's office directed the decision on the fee.

Andrea Bitely, spokesperson for Mr. Schuette, said Progress Michigan's own documents show the attorney general's office called for the material to be released.

"But the taxpayers expect they won't have to pay for an attack group's fishing expedition, so we follow the law on fees. It's just tiresome games from a political attack group," she said in an email.

However, since the question of large fees being charged for FOIA requests has been raised by a number of organizations (Gongwer News Service has also had to negotiate with the state over fees charged for FOIA requests), Ms. Bitely was asked if the Department of Attorney General had discussed with departments how FOIA fees should be set. By Thursday evening, there had been no reply to that question.

Mr. Scott also said the dispute shows that reforms in how FOIA laws are applied are needed.

In Energy Discussion, Companies Say Cost, Reliability Are Key

Having reliable and cost-effective electricity sources are critical to corporate operations, top executives from two of Michigan's largest companies told the Senate Energy and Technology Committee on Thursday, but the first priority is ensuring the state has competitive costs.

Supporters of electric choice cheered comments made by the president of Dow Chemical's North American operations, who said the best way to get the electricity the company needs "is through a competitive bidding process."

Offsetting those remarks, the chief energy executive for Ford Motor Company said his firm supports { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB43701" }, the controversial measure now before the committee. The bill needs changes, George Andraos said, but will help assure reliability while the state gets to a lower overall cost.

Mr. Andraos, Rich Wells of Dow and Pete Milojevic, president of the Midland Cogeneration Venture, spoke almost equally about cost and reliability, with much of the focus on reliability.

Mr. Wells and Mr. Andraos said any interruption in reliability causes major production headaches and costs for their firms.

While a homeowner seeing a flashing signal - indicating the power was out for a while - might have to deal with the annoyance of resetting their microwave oven, a Dow plant has to shut down for the time the power is off, Mr. Wells said.

"We need reliability for the long-term and the next second," Mr. Wells told the committee.

Mr. Andraos said the power doesn't even have to shut off for it to force a plant to close. If there is a 30 percent reduction in wattage produced, that shuts down a production line. And the time it will take to restart the line could mean millions of dollars lost in production.

In outlining energy costs in states where Ford has production plants, Mr. Andraos acknowledged Michigan had higher costs, although those costs had dropped from 2014 to 2015.

Pressed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" } (R-Clarklake), a major supporter of expanded electric competition, Mr. Andraos said that Ford was part of a group of companies that had urged utilities to provide more competitive electric costs.

But he also said in those states that had greater electric competition, the source of electricity tended to be more vulnerable.

Mr. Milojevic said if needed, and given a one-day advance notice, MCV can ramp up to provide more electricity that is available regionwide through distribution systems.

He also said MCV is the lowest cost producer, adding, "We've been cost competitive for 25 years."

And he agreed with Mr. Wells that electricity should be available to customers on an open-bidding system that would allow all producers to compete so long as they can meet reliability standards.

Mr. Wells implied cutting electric costs further would go a long way towards making Michigan more competitive. Tax and regulatory changes the state has made in the last five years have made an excellent start to making the state more competitive, "but it can do more," he said.

Steve Transeth, a former member of the Public Service Commission and now an energy consultant, said the state needs to do more to ensure reliability. The bill would require alternative energy suppliers to certify they can meet their customers' demand, but he said that is not enough.

"I would require of anybody in the state that they demonstrate that they have firm capacity to meet their obligations," Mr. Transeth said. He said the bill as structured now would not require the incumbent utilities to prove they can meet projected demand.

ROBOCALLS: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=52901&locid=1" } (R-Whitmore Lake), a member of the committee, said in a statement Thursday that some organization has been conducting robocalls in his district on the issue.

Mr. Hune said the calls include some misleading information on SB 437 and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB43801" } and, while they allow recipients to be transferred to his office, he is not connected to the calls.

Cotter Still Hoping For Road Funding Solution In October

Mr. Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) told reporters after session that talks continue to go well.

Mr. Cotter did say he opposes outlining where the General Fund portion of a roads deal would come from.

"I don't think we have to specify the cuts ahead of time. I think we pass a balanced budget and make those decisions as part of the appropriations process," he said.

Mr. Cotter was also questioned as to if there is an agreement among the Legislative Quadrant not to talk about specifics from the meetings.

He said because they are negotiating, the details can change from day-to-day.

"It doesn't do anything productive to have the details of the day out there," he said. "Let's wait until we have an agreement around the table. Once we all have signed off on that then we'll take it back, we'll make it public, we'll share it with caucuses. We'll share it with the public at large and see if we can get it passed."

Mr. Cotter also said he does not wish to debate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } (R-Canton Township) on whether new revenue is needed for roads.

"It's not that I am not willing to debate. I am going to spend my energy on things that are productive to solving the problem," he said.

Senate Panel Exploring Billboards In Special Use Zones

The Senate Transportation Committee began discussions Thursday on legislation that would allow billboards in areas with certain special use permits where zoning would not otherwise allow the signs.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB43501" }) was drafted to resolve concerns of a billboard company in the Grand Rapids area that had been ordered to remove a sign in an area zoned for manufactured housing, a residential designation, but with a special use permit to allow some commercial development.

But Department of Transportation officials said the bill as drafted would put the state out of compliance with federal law and could risk loss of federal transportation funds.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell) said the bill was designed to resolve an issue facing Grand Rapids Outdoor, which had converted an existing billboard to digital, had that sign approved by the township, but then had the Department of Transportation reject the permit because it was not in a commercial or industrial zone.

"Even if you don't like billboards ... this is an appropriate place for a billboard," Mr. Hildenbrand said.

Stephen Disselkoen, vice president of Grand Rapids Outdoor, said the board is next to a commercial storage facility, and he said the size of the facility, under Michigan law, automatically makes the area commercial.

He also said the department had not been involved in the permitting process until the very end.

"The underlying zoning has this name of manufactured housing community," Mr. Disselkoen said. The township is saying nowhere does it say our list of uses is exhaustive."

Matt DeLong, Development Services Division administrator for the department, said federal law does not allow such signs.

"Billboards are not an allowed use per se unless you specifically zone for billboards," Mr. DeLong said. "They are specifically not allowed where you have a special use permit. It goes to the underlying zoning."

Mr. DeLong could not comment specifically on the Grand Rapids Outdoor case because it was still in litigation with a decision from the administrative law judge expected soon.

But he said the bill, in allowing billboards in non-commercial zones, would put the state out of compliance with federal law and so risk up to 10 percent of the state's federal highway funding.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=74701&locid=1" } (R-Escanaba) chastised the department for not taking residents' side on such issues.

"That's where the rub seems to come in is our government doesn't seem to want to help our businesses stay in business," Mr. Casperson said. "I think you guys had ways to try to defend him."

Mr. DeLong said the department does try to work with residents to bring billboards into compliance, so he said challenges to department decisions are rare. "We very rarely lose because we don't arbitrarily (take cases to administrative hearing)," he said. "Most are resolved long before that. ... The last thing we want to be doing is spending our time or the constituent's time in an expensive process."

But he also said the department did not challenge rulings against it.

Senate Approves Implied Consent For Drug Tests In Crashes

At-fault drivers in a crash that leads to serious injury or death would be considered to have consented to a blood or urine drug test under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15301" }, passed Thursday in the Senate.

The bill, which passed 30-5, would allow police to collect blood or urine from the at-fault driver and to use the results of tests of those materials in a criminal prosecution.

"Billy's Law closes a loophole that has delayed or denied justice from crime victims and their families," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=206201&locid=1" } (R-Traverse City), the bill sponsor, said in a statement.

The bill was named for Billy Kochis and John Pomeroy, who died from injuries suffered in a traffic crash on U.S. 131 near Grand Rapids in 2013. The at-fault driver in the case would not consent to testing and a magistrate did not issue a search warrant, so police were not able to confirm suspicions that the driver was under the influence of drugs at the time of the crash.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT: The Strategic Fund approved grants to five projects around the state Thursday that would reportedly generate $14 million in private investment and 121 jobs.

Edmore was awarded $625,875 in Community Development Block Grant funds for the Edmore Marketplace, redevelopment of an historic downtown building for an indoor marketplace and activity center and outdoor farmers market. The development is expected to generate $870,000 in investment and 66 jobs.

Hillsdale was awarded $785,500 in CDBG funds for 42 Union Street Redevelopment, retail space and eight apartment units, a projected $1.5 million investment and three jobs.

Benzie County received $463,370 in CDBG funds for the Crystal Mountain expansion project in Weldon Township. The $10 million project is projected to create 48 jobs, and the grant funds will pay for training.

Munising has been awarded $459,050 in CDBG funds to develop the Pictured Rocks Interpretive Center in a currently vacant and blighted building. Another $500,000 in private investment is expected for the project.

Port Huron Citadel, LLC was awarded $200,000 in Michigan Community Revitalization Program grants to revitalize the building of the same name in downtown Port Huron into a mixed use space including a theater. The $1.2 million project is projected to create four jobs.

Senate Approves Ban On Breed Prohibitions

Local governments would not be able to adopt breed-specific dog control ordinances, and those already in place would be overturned, under legislation that passed the Senate on Thursday.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB23901" }), passed on a bipartisan 25-11 vote, would not prohibit general restrictions on dogs or dog owners.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=155301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) said the bill was another infringement on local control.

"I firmly believe our community leaders must retain the authority to address these matters at the local level," Ms. Warren said, noting that 27 communities already have some form of breed-specific ordinance.

But only { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=36301&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161201&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) from the Democratic caucus joined Ms. Warren in opposition. Republicans { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=42701&locid=1" } of Harrison Township, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=251401&locid=1" } of Canton Township, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=60301&locid=1" } of Sheridan, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } of Saint Clair, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=79201&locid=1" } of Sterling Heights, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" } of Clarklake, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=210301&locid=1" } of Midland and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276201&locid=1" } of Ida also opposed the bill.

Bill Would Require Capitol Drone Flight Permits

Those wanting to film the Capitol from the air would need a permit under legislation introduced Thursday by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=82701&locid=1" }.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB54901" }) would give the Capitol Commission authority over drone flights on, or above, the grounds. Anyone wanting to use a drone would have to apply to that body for a permit.

The commission has already banned drone flights from the grounds.

"If the Capitol Commission wants to allow trained photographers to use drones for a special event or a wedding, that would be appropriate," Mr. Jones said in a statement announcing the legislation. "However, allowing anyone to buy a drone and then take it down to the Capitol to buzz the building is not fun and games. It's inappropriate and puts the visiting public at unnecessary risk."

The bill would make it a 93-day, $500 misdemeanor to fly a drone around the Capitol without a permit.

CIVIL RIGHTS DIRECTOR: The Civil Rights Commission announced Thursday a special meeting to discuss three more candidates to succeed retiring { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=350501&locid=1" }.

Officials said technical problems with the job posting caused the candidates to be overlooked during initial resume reviews.

The meeting is scheduled for Monday at 3:30 p.m. in the Second Floor Conference Room, International Institute of Metropolitan Detroit, 111 East Kirby Street, Detroit.

PIPELINE LAWSUIT: The National Wildlife Federation announced Thursday that it was suing the U.S. Department of Transportation for failure to prevent oil pipeline ruptures and resultant spills.

The group is arguing that all pipelines nationwide that touch a water body are being operated illegally because there are not sufficient safeguards in place to prevent spills.

"We hope today's action will be a catalyst for long-overdue protections that benefit people, communities, and wildlife," Mike Shriberg, regional executive director of the National Wildlife Federation's Great Lakes Regional Center, said in a statement. "The federal government needs to enforce the law to prevent oil pipeline disasters from fouling our water and threatening our communities and iconic places."

The EM Law And Flint: A Dispute On Its Role

The Flint water crisis has caused the debate over Michigan's local financial emergency law to roar back to life with considerable fury emanating from Flint that the law's focus on bringing a community's finances back into balance played a major role in the actions that led to using the Flint River as a temporary source of drinking water.

A lack of sufficient corrosion controls in the water pumped from the Flint River allowed lead from service lines to leach into the water, leading to lead levels in some spots well past federal limits and rising levels of lead in children's blood, prompting a frantic effort in the past two weeks to get filters to Flint residents and businesses, and switch back to Detroit water until a new pipeline to Lake Huron serving the city and counties to the east is finished.

When the final decision was made in 2014 to begin drawing water from the Flint River, ending a more than 40-year agreement with the Detroit Water and Sewerage Department to pull water from that system, Emergency Manager Darnell Earley was in total control of city operations under the Local Financial Stability and Choice Act.

Predating the city falling under control of an emergency manager in 2011, Flint, along with Genesee, Lapeer and Sanilac counties, had been studying forming a new authority to build their own pipe to Lake Huron, breaking away from the Detroit system. Flint was debating whether to switch to the new authority or draw from the Flint River. At the time, the concern from local officials, according to reports in The Flint Journal, was the cost of upgrading Flint water infrastructure. There was widespread agreement that the quality of water in the river was good.

And eventually those cost concerns ended consideration of using the Flint River as a permanent source of drinking water.

In 2012, with Emergency Manager Michael Brown now running the city, his administration began considering use of the Flint River as a temporary water source until the new Karengondi Water Authority pipeline could be completed.

In 2013, the council voted to drop Detroit water for the new Karengondi system.

Eventually, with a decision needing to be made on where to draw water until that system could be completed, Mr. Earley signed an order to draw the water out of the Flint River, saving more than $1 million a month. It was a decision lauded by many local officials, with Flint Mayor Dayne Walling pushing the button to shut off water from Detroit. Glasses of treated river water were raised to celebrate the moment.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=358901&locid=1" } (D-Flint) was a member of the Flint City Council during this time, and he said the crisis shows the state needs to change the emergency manager law.

"The emergency manager law from my perspective caused 100 percent of the problem," he said.

Changes need to be made to assure a review panel on decisions made by emergency managers involving the health, welfare and safety of the community, Mr. Neeley said. He called { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB86501" } a failed experiment.

"There should be some safeguards," he said.

While the council did vote for the KWA, it never voted on switching to the Flint River as a temporary source of water, he said, and to the extent local officials praised the reliability of the river as a drinking water source, he said that was because they assumed the water would be properly treated.

Further, Mr. Neeley said the emergency manager at the time of the vote, Ed Kurtz, vetoed the resolution adopted by the council, which he said contained changes to Mr. Kurtz's version, and then Mr. Kurtz, under his emergency manager powers, implemented his initial resolution.

But { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville), the sponsor of the original emergency manager law (later replaced with PA 436), said the law is not to blame. Flint wanted to leave the Detroit system for years.

"There's a lot of revisionist history going on here," he said. "The emergency manager didn't make the decision to build a pipeline to Lake Huron."

And Mr. Pscholka said local officials were involved in the decision to begin pumping water out of the Flint River.

"It was not as simple as the emergency manager declaring I'm going to be a hero and save a million and a half dollars by doing this," he said. "The locals were involved in this."

Mr. Pscholka said he saw no need to change the law to address this situation.

At some point, an engineer must have advised Mr. Earley the river would work as a water source, Mr. Pscholka said. The same thing would have happened had the city not been under emergency management.

"The blame game, I'm sure, will continue," he said. "But my focus right now on the floor is to make sure the people of Flint have safe drinking water."

The Legislature is expected to move swiftly this week on putting up $6 million toward the cost of Flint drawing water from Detroit until next summer.

Moody's Report Raises Concern About School Credit Ratings

In a report that focuses on the Holland School District, a top Wall Street rating agency has determined that problems the district is facing due to enrollment are indicative of problems that many districts across Michigan are facing.

And according to an analyst for Moody's Investors Services, these problems are ones school districts across Michigan have faced for several years. While the agency has downgraded the credit ratings of 44 school districts so far this year, that follows a number of downgrades made over the last several years.

Andrew Van Dyck Dobos, a Chicago-based analyst for the firm, said school districts across the state may see lower credit ratings across the board and have to recognize that as a "new normal."

State policy on school finance, adopted in 1994 as part of the Proposal A school finance reforms, makes it extremely tough for districts to raise revenues locally, he said, which is unusual among other states in the Midwest. Plus, the state's policy now has funding following the students instead of being based more on a geographic basis.

Almost the only way districts can raise funds is by attracting more students, and that has been made difficult by an estimated 13 percent drop in Michigan's population of children under 18 from 2000 to 2012.

While the report focused on Holland, it said the issues that district faced were similar to problems school districts across the state are facing.

Michigan schools held "count day" last week to establish student population. Schools do not have to report their totals until November, and state officials said there have been no early reports on enrollment.

The state forecasted total school enrollment for the 2015-16 school year at 1.493 million students, down 14,700 from the total in 2014-15, during the May Revenue Estimating Conference. Of that projected total, 1.335 million were expected to attend traditional public schools, while 158,000 were anticipated to enroll in charter schools and the Education Achievement Authority in Detroit.

In Holland, Moody's said the district was forecasting a drop of 174 students on top of declines in six of the past seven school years. If the district does lose that many students, it would mean a cut in total state aid of $591,000.

Enrollment concerns run across the state, Mr. Van Dyck Dobos said. In rural areas, school population has declined because of overall demographic factors - with more older people living in the areas - and with families leaving the areas in search of jobs.

In suburban areas, Michigan's schools of choice policy spurs ongoing competition for students, which means some districts get more students from other districts as opposed to a natural increase, he said.

And in larger urban areas, Mr. Van Dyck Dobos said, traditional public schools face more competition from charter schools.

The report also said state aid per student has been stagnant in Holland and statewide.

In the 2015-16 budget, total school aid funding is $13.89 billion, up from $13.68 billion in the 2014-15 budget.

The minimum per pupil allowance, according to the state, is $7,391. Moody's, however, said Holland will see school aid of $7,126 per student, which is $318 less per student than it was in 2011.

The state has raised money for schools, Mr. Van Dyck Dobos said, but increases to districts have not followed inflation as much as they had in the past.

Adding to the fiscal problem is the limitation the state has for school districts seeking more funding on a local level. Since the adoption of the Proposal A in 1994, property taxes paid for schools are collected and allocated by the state.

Virtually the only option Proposal A allowed for local schools to raise more money at the local level for operations has to come countywide, and very few counties have adopted that option, Mr. Van Dyck Dobos said.

All that means, he said, is that until school populations recover and grow, school districts will have to deal with ongoing fiscal issues.

That will affect credit ratings and mean more downgrades. Since 2009 - and including 2015, though figures for 2014 were not immediately available - Moody's has downgraded a total of at least 181 school districts. Dozens of those were downgraded multi-steps in their overall credit worthiness.

Mr. Van Dyck Dobos said districts statewide may see an overall downgrading of their credit ratings, and have to expect that to continue.

In dealing with the realities of their finances, Mr. Van Dyck Dobos said Michigan districts have thus far been more innovative than districts in other states in finding solutions. For example, he said, in dealing with employee contracts many districts have worked out one-time payments to teachers and other workers instead of adopting general wage increases.

HP Returns To State To Aid With BAM Project

While the Department of State and Hewlett Packard await continuation of a court hearing on their dispute over how they managed the Business Application Modernization project, HP has returned its workers to the state, a department spokesperson said.

The state terminated its contract with HP and then sued the company. HP pulled its workers from the project and refused to turn over the source code. Major worries have been raised about a collapse of online services without access to that source code and an orderly transition.

The state is seeking a preliminary injunction ordering HP's staff back to work and the turning over of the source code.

Department spokesperson Gisgie Davila Gendreau said HP staff was working side-by-side Monday with staff from the departments of State and Technology, Management and Budget. And the two sides are working out a transition plan, she said.

"It's a step in the right direction," she said.

The court hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction is scheduled resume Friday.

Consumers Projects Lower Heating Costs For Winter

Consumers Energy on Monday projected lower heating costs this winter for its natural gas customers, with savings of more than $100 for an average residential customer depending on weather and actual usage.

"We're reducing costs for customers due to our gas purchasing program which takes full advantage of lower commodity costs," said Tim Sparks, the company's vice president of energy supply operations, in a statement. "Customers also benefit by Consumers Energy's underground storage system ... (which) allows us to buy gas when it costs less in the summer, for use by customers during the colder winter months."

Customer heating costs could be down by more than 15 percent based on normal winter gas consumption, the company estimated. Business customer savings will depend on their gas usage.

The company also noted that its customers are paying 60 percent less for natural gas than a decade ago, and the last time fuel prices were this low was in 2001.

Consumers' natural gas commodity price has hovered around the $5 mark for the last three years ($5.45 per thousand cubic feet in 2012, $4.63 in 2013 and $5.14 in 2014), but that saw a dramatic dip in 2015 to $3.31.

The Public Service Commission has not yet issued its annual Michigan Energy Appraisal for the winter of 2015-2016 that projects the total sales in Michigan for natural gas, electricity and petroleum, among other fuels. The appraisal for natural gas for last winter was an expectation of an increase in sales by about one percent from 2013 under the expectation that temperatures would return to more normal conditions in Michigan.

Several Cities Still Showing Double-Digit Unemployment

Michigan's statewide unemployment rate matches the federal rate of 5.1 percent, but estimates by the state show that in four cities unemployment is still in double-digit figures.

Unemployment has dropped considerably in those cities from the stratospheric highs - jobless rates of 30 percent and higher in Highland Park and Pontiac - during the Great Recession. But the numbers still stick out compared to the state's overall decline in unemployment.

In August, according the state's Labor Market Information section, Highland Park had the highest jobless rate in the state at 15.7 percent.

That was followed by Detroit at 12.7 percent, then Pontiac at 11.6 percent and Inkster at 11 percent.

Georgetown Township, in Ottawa County, had the lowest unemployment rate among the cities and townships tracked, with the jobless rate at 2.1 percent in August. Northville Township in Wayne County had the second lowest unemployment rate at 2.2 percent.

In contrast, no county had a jobless rate in double digits in August. Schoolcraft County had the highest jobless rate at 9.6 percent. Mackinac County had the lowest unemployment rate in August at 2.8 percent, and 41 of Michigan's 83 counties had unemployment rates below the state's rate of 5.1 percent.

State Provides Water Filters For Flint Child Care Facilities

The Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs announced Monday that any registered child care facilities in Flint can receive free water filters.

The Department of Health and Human Services is providing free water filters to the child care providers, including an additional filter for any home-based providers who already received one as a resident.

The Genesee County Community Action Resource Department is also providing water-filtering pitchers.

Both the pitchers and filters will be available at the GCCARD office, 2727 Lippincott, beginning at 9 a.m. on Tuesday. To qualify, those picking up pitchers and filters have to show a child care license and proof of employment at the facility.

MOTOR CARRIER SCHOOL OPENS: Twenty-one recruits have begun training to become Department of State Police motor carrier officers. They will receive instruction in firearms, water safety, defensive tactics, patrol techniques, report writing, ethics, first aid, criminal law, precision driving, commercial vehicle law and commercial vehicle inspection procedures. Those who graduate will conclude the program in February.

PASSENGER RAIL: The Department of Transportation announced Monday it was seeking proposals on asset management plans for upcoming intercity passenger rail service.

The { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan.gov/documents/mdot/MDOT_RFP_RA_REQ1844_OR-15-185_posted_502471_7.pdf" \t "blank" } is particularly to outline parts of that maintenance that could be provided by Michigan companies.

"The challenge is that if we do NOT prepare to compete for this service, the economic benefits of providing such services could go to other states," the bid request said. "In addition, absent an effective strategy or system in place to provide for long-term care of the fleet, rail service and the multi-state investment in new equipment could be compromised due to premature wear and tear that could have been prevented by adequate planning."

Proposals are due November 2.

LARA ISSUES TWO KENT COUNTY CHILD CARE SUSPENSIONS: The Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs expects to suspend the child care certificate of registration of two Kent County residents.

The first, Sandra LaFortune, at 122 Wadsworth Street SW, in Wyoming, is to be suspended after a complaint investigation found in July violations of law regarding family and group child care homes.

Under the suspension, Ms. LaFortune is prohibited from operating a family child care home at the aforementioned address, or any other address or location. She may not accept children for care, and she must inform all of the parents of children in her care that her certificate of registration has been suspended and she can no longer provide child care.

The second suspension is for Terri Kowalczyk, 3584 Leonard Street NW, in Walker. The suspension comes as a complaint investigation earlier this month found violations of law regarding caregiver suitability, supervision, capacity, record maintenance, bedding and sleeping and equipment, and home maintenance and safety.

Ms. Kowalczyk is subject to the same disciplinary actions and required information to her clients as Ms. LaFortune, LARA noted in a statement.

Campaign Notes: Prevailing Wage Challenge Deadline

Challenges to the proposal to repeal prevailing wage are due October 26 at 5 p.m., the Department of State announced Monday.

Volume #54, Report #203 -- Tuesday, October 13, 2015

Road Funding Talks Falter - Again

Call it an impasse, a stall, hiccup or some other term, but weeks of discussions between Governor Rick Snyder and legislative leaders clearly suffered a setback Tuesday.

For weeks, Mr. Snyder and the Legislative Quadrant - House Speaker Kevin Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant), Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive), Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) and House Minority Leader Tim Greimel (D-Auburn Hills) - have sounded upbeat about progress toward an eventual deal to raise $1.2 billion in funds for roads.

And while not revealing details, there was a general sense that they had agreed on the road funding package but were still working out the complementary legislation needed to sell it to the rank-and-file members of each of the four legislative caucuses. So when Mr. Snyder declared after Tuesday's meeting they had hit an impasse, it was surprising, if not shocking, considering the long, difficult path efforts to win new funding for roads has taken.

"We had made a lot of progress in prior meetings. We're at an impasse now," Mr. Snyder said.

But that was not a universally accepted characterization of the situation. Mr. Meekhof described the situation as a "stall," and Mr. Greimel said he hoped the various parties had not reached an impasse.

And while Mr. Snyder gravely warned he would not continue to meet with the Legislative Quadrant on the issue absent resumption of progress, suggesting he might cancel Wednesday's meeting, by late Tuesday night, that meeting had yet to be officially scrubbed.

The problem appears to center on an income tax cut as part of the overall package. Democrats are resisting, concerned it would strain the General Fund and damage the programs that rely on it for their funds. Republicans want the income tax cut to soften the blow for their members of voting to raise taxes.

While never officially announced, the road funding package is expected to involve $400 million from a gasoline tax hike, $400 million from other new revenues - mainly from ending the depreciation on vehicle registration fees in the first years of owning the vehicle - and $400 million dedicated from the General Fund.

Mr. Snyder declined to discuss details of the meeting but said it was "fair to say people have different perspectives as to what tax relief might look like."

And Mr. Greimel said, "We would prefer tax relief that benefits fairly broad groups of incomes as opposed to the Senate Republican income tax cut that disproportionately benefits the wealthy and the well-connected."

The Senate-passed plan called for reducing the income tax rate based on a complicated formula involving how much state revenue had grown.

Gideon D'Assandro, spokesperson for Mr. Cotter, said House Republicans will continue to negotiate and work on a solution that fixes the roads and protects Michigan taxpayers.

"Including tax relief in the deal has been part of the negotiations from day one, and it remains a Republican priority," he said. "We put together a responsible, balanced budget this year that included $400 million for road repairs, and we can do it again in a way that protects Michigan's hard-working taxpayers."

Mr. Snyder made it clear he saw diminishing returns to continuing to hold meetings absent more progress.

"Unless I see progress, I'm not going to schedule more," he said.

Mr. Snyder said he hoped legislative leaders would take time to reflect and understand a compromise would be needed.

Mr. Greimel called for meetings to continue.

"I am committed to continuing to meet and see if we can talk through the disagreements and reach an agreement on a road plan that is fiscally responsible and sustainable," he said. "I have also made it very clear that I am not willing to agree to any proposal that jeopardizes funding for public safety, education and health care."

Mr. Meekhof, in a statement, emphasized that the Senate had passed a road funding plan that called for an $800 million gasoline tax hike and dedicating $700 million from the General Fund to roads.

"Since passage of the Senate plan, I have been realistic in my expectations that ultimately a road funding plan would include compromise in order for all parties to agree," he said. "For me, taxpayers deserve long-term tax relief, especially when we are seeking additional resources to fund our roads. I am disappointed that months of discussion and progress at the leadership level have stalled, but a standstill at the leadership level is not an indication of unwillingness on the part of the Senate."

Meekhof spokesperson Amber McCann said the use of the word "stalled" instead of impasse was deliberate.

"Impasse implies a much more negative state than we're in at this point," she said. "The majority leader is still optimistic that a road funding solution is possible."

Mr. Meekhof also is willing to meet if others want to do so, Ms. McCann said.

Lance Binoniemi of the Michigan Infrastructure and Transportation Association said he long ago had learned not to get too excited about the good developments on roads and not too upset at the bad ones.

"We've had a lot of these types of days where talks seem to break down," he said.

He also put the best face on the use of the term impasse, which he said surprised him.

"They've never had a deal in place so there's always been an impasse," he said, chuckling.

More seriously, Mr. Binoniemi said the intensity shown Tuesday was a sign that Mr. Snyder and legislative leaders are getting to the real issues of a deal.

"I haven't heard from one person out of the quadrant yet that talks are done, they've failed and they're not coming back," he said. "I remain optimistic. We've had days like this before and we've survived to the next day. Until someone throws up their hands and says it's done, we're not going to do this, I don't get too nervous."

Bill Allowing Concealed Guns, Ending Open Carry In Gun-Free Zones Clears Senate Panel

The Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday reported a bill that would prohibit open carry in gun-free zones such as schools, churches and hospitals, and instead allow those with concealed pistol licenses to carry a concealed firearm in those facilities.

Backers say the bill would address the problem of people openly carrying guns on or near school property, which in an age where mass shootings at schools are sickeningly common has prompted school officials to put their building in lockdown while police determine the situation. In some instances, the person openly carrying is doing so to make the point they legally have the right to do so.

But the legislation also would wipe out one of the key pieces of the 2000 overhaul of the concealed pistol license law by effectively wiping out gun-free zones. To convince then-Governor John Engler to sign a bill taking away the power of local gun boards to decide who could get a CPL and instead making licenses automatic to law-abiding applicants with no record of involuntary commitment for mental illness, the gun-free zones were established.

The committee reported two bills - one by Sen. Mike Green (R-Mayville) in SB 442, and the other by Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive) in SB 561, which was just introduced and sent to the committee on Tuesday.

An amendment was adopted to Mr. Green's bill to tie-bar it to Mr. Meekhof's bill (and vice versa), as Mr. Green's bill makes the concealed carry change in the state's handgun licensure law while Mr. Meekhof's makes the concealed carry change in the penal code.

"Permit holders have lower rates for arrests and convictions than police officers," said John Lott, a pro-gun researcher and economist. "Since 1950, with just two exceptions, every mass shooting has taken place where guns are banned."

As the state's law is currently written, a person cannot possess a firearm on the premises of a financial institution, a church or other house of religious worship, a court, bar, theatre, sports arena or stadium, day care center and hospital.

Although the Senate hearing room was packed full of various opposing interests, and especially parents of school children who derided Mr. Green's legislation as unnecessary and problematic, the committee voted 4-1 to report the bills as substituted and with amendments to the full Senate floor for consideration. Sen. Steve Bieda (D-Warren) opposed the bill.

Testimony in opposition to SB 442 began with several church officials and then led into school officials, including the superintendent of Ann Arbor Public Schools and the Michigan Association of School Boards, among others. Several other education officials who were also CPL holders testified in opposition, followed by gun control advocates and then gun rights backers.

"We are not coming here as an association that's anti-gun, but one concerned about the safety of our students," said Don Wotruba, executive director of MASB. "(Open-carry) has become disruptive. Moving to a concealed carry system only hides the danger; it doesn't get rid of it."

Mr. Wotruba also argued that allowing concealed carry in gun-free zones such as schools could make the ability of police officers to respond to mass shooting situations more difficult in that they will first have to identify who is or is not carrying before trying to figure out which direction a shooter went or who it could be. All of that takes time away from their ability to act quickly in such a situation, he said.

But Mr. Green, speaking to reporters after the vote, said some of the people testifying against the bill, and especially the school groups, "weren't testifying on the bill."

"Every one of their statements was 'we don't want guns in schools.' It wasn't a matter of 'we've got guns in schools, let's change the law,' which is what I'm trying to do. Their whole testimony didn't really discuss what the bill was doing," he said. "I think the message that was sent today was 'we don't want guns in school,' and we understand that. We're trying to fix a fix, trying to do them a favor.

"We, as gun owners, have every right in the world to carry in most of the gun-free zones. Are we going to give that up? We're taking a step back and saying we'll cover them up if you guys are willing to do it. They don't even want that," Mr. Green said.

And he said some of the testimony spoke only to hypotheticals.

"I've always said to the stadium folks that wanted to be left in the gun-free zones, you don't even know if there's any bad guns there. You only want to disallow good guns," he said. "The debate is going back and forth about what's a gun zone, and the fact is most people could carry there today because the penalties are so light."

All told, the committee permitted slightly more than hour of testimony after Mr. Green and Mr. Lott spoke on the merits of the bill for more than 30 minutes at the start of the committee. Sen. Rick Jones (R-Grand Ledge) said he sought to report the bill despite that many more people wished to testify on their position on the bill given some committee members had other meetings they had to get to. Mr. Jones said he would, however, stay to listen to anyone else who wished to speak on the matter.

After the vote, Mr. Bieda said he thought it "insulting" to the people who traveled to testify, as well as insulting to the institution. His remark was met with applause from many in the audience, which Mr. Jones immediately gaveled down.

Mr. Green was not immediately sure how soon the bill could be taken up by the full Senate.

Mr. Meekhof has said he supports the legislation, but Governor Rick Snyder has been opposed to essentially ending gun-free zones.

House Panel Considers Banning Certain Kinds Of Abortions

The House Criminal Justice Committee discussed banning dilation and evacuation abortions on Tuesday, with the Republican sponsor of the bill calling the procedure "barbaric," but Democrats charged the procedure is used in 95 percent of second trimester abortions and would limit women's access to care.

Rep. Laura Cox (R-Livonia), sponsor of HB 4833 and HB 4834 banning the procedure, which in the bill is called a "dismemberment abortion," and would charge anyone who performed the procedure - except to save the mother's life - with a felony punishable by two years in prison and/or a $50,000 fine.

Ms. Cox called the procedure cruel and said during it, "tiny, unborn humans are literally torn apart."

"It seems unconscionable to me that this type of abortion exists and it is time that this practice ended," she said.

In 2014 there were 26,321 reported abortions in the state, with 2,264 being dilation and evacuation procedures, according to the Department of Health and Human Services.

The bill defines "dismemberment" abortion as "an abortion in which the physician, an individual acting under the delegatory authority of the physician, or any other individual performing the abortion deliberately and intentionally uses any instrument, device, or object to dismember a living fetus by disarticulating limbs or decapitating the head from the fetal torso and removing the dismembered fetal body parts from the uterus regardless of whether the fetal body parts are removed by the same instrument, device, or object or by suction or other means."

Rep. Marcia Hovey-Wright (D-Muskegon) said according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention the procedure is the safest method for women 14 weeks pregnant and later.

Ms. Cox said there are other abortion procedures available and the dilation and evacuation procedure is not necessary.

Rep. Stephanie Chang (D-Detroit) said similar laws have been challenged in Oklahoma and Kansas and asked Ms. Cox how the state would pay for a court challenge.

"I am actually ready for the fight," Ms. Cox said. She also said the state would determine how to fund such a fight during the appropriations process.

Matt Allswede, a gynecologist and the vice chair of the American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Michigan chapter, said the group is alarmed at the attempt to ban physicians from providing safe and evidence-based health care.

He said according to the CDC, pregnancy complications were the sixth-leading cause of death for women between 20 and 34 years old.

"The bills create a dangerous environment for women by preventing doctors from having every option available when providing care," he said. Mr. Allswede said science, not political beliefs, should be the basis of medical decisions.

Mr. Allswede, who said he had performed the procedure last week, said it is a very intense experience.

"It is something that is very emotional for us as people as well as physicians," he said. "And yet we do it because we do believe in those circumstances it is in the best interest of the woman. Our choice to proceed with something that we may have our own emotional feelings to contend with, it's superseded by our professional commitment to do what's best for our patients."

Mr. Allswede said the reason the procedure is safer for second-term abortions is a medical abortion that creates a "mini-labor" experience. He said the medication used are sometime problematic for patients and the pro-longed process makes patients more susceptible to infections, which is the biggest threat to future fertility.

Ed Rivet, with Right to Life of Michigan, spoke in support of the bill, said the dilation and evacuation procedure facilitates the harvesting of fetal organs.

Mr. Rivet then took out a pair of forceps and brought out a plastic fetus to "demonstrate" the procedure. Mr. Rivet later told the committee he had never performed an abortion, had never seen one in person, but had seen the procedure done on a video on the internet.

"Initially I was going to apologize for the gruesomeness. You can see my hands shaking," he said after his demonstration. "But this is just the reality of it, folks. It's just the truth about how a child is torn apart, piece by piece."

Daniel Wechter, a gynecologist who is anti-abortion, said he has only had to use the procedure to save the life of a mother six times in his 41-year career. Mr. Wechter said he works with high-risk pregnancies.

He said he disagrees that the procedure is safer than others when it comes to second trimester abortions. He said of the physicians with whom he spoke who support the right to a legal abortion, they told him there is a degree of cervical trauma from the procedure.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan also spoke in opposition to the bill. In written testimony, the group said the bills are unnecessary, unconstitutional and unsafe.

The committee did not act on the bill Tuesday, but Rep. Kurt Heise (R-Plymouth), chair of the committee, indicated the bill would come up in the committee again.

Court Hears Arguments On Whether MCCA Is Public Body

If the Michigan Catastrophic Claims Association is a public body, then the Legislature violated the Constitution by not making it subject to the state's Freedom of Information Act, the Supreme Court was told Tuesday. If it is not a public body, then the issue is moot.

And the MCCA in its response argued that in fact it was not a public body, that it was created as a private, non-profit agency answerable to insurance companies and not the public. While its decision on the insurance surcharge individuals have to pay on their auto no-fault insurance does have an impact on the public, the public is not actually required to pay it as the insurance companies could cover the cost, the Supreme Court was told.

The arguments before the court, in Coalition Protecting Auto No-Fault v. MCCA (SC docket No. 150001), were to determine if the court will actually hear full arguments on the issue, or decide the case on the arguments presented.

The case drew lots of attention, as the Supreme Court chambers were crowded with people, many who were injured in auto accidents. At one point MCCA attorney Lori McAllister said the public had a lot of interest in the case, Chief Justice Robert Young Jr. joked that he thought they were all there to see the newest justice, Justice Joan Larsen.

Opponents of change to the no-fault system have argued for some years that the MCCA needs to open itself to public scrutiny so it can be determined how much in assets it has and the real impact it has on insurance rates.

The matter is on appeal from the Court of Appeals which held the MCCA is not a public body. The trial court had said it was a public body.

Joanne Swanson, arguing for CPAN and the Brain Injury Association of Michigan, said the issue is simply that the MCCA is a public body and that in enacting the MCCA the Legislature unconstitutionally exempted it from the FOIA and failed to amend and republish the FOIA as is required by the Constitution.

The state's no-fault law was enacted in 1972. The FOIA was enacted in 1976. Then in 1978, the Supreme Court upheld the no-fault law in the Shaver's decision but said the Legislature had to enact further protections to ensure insurance was affordable and that motorists had access to information about how their rates were derived. In meeting the requirement of the Supreme Court, the Legislature adopted changes to the no-fault act, and among those was adopting the MCCA.

The overall structure of the MCCA and its impact on the public makes it a public body, subject to the FOIA, Ms. Swanson said.

And the overall intent of the FOIA shows that if the Legislature intended it to not be subject to the FOIA then it had to specify which documents would not be subject to the law, she said. But the Legislature described no documents that would be exempt and, in fact, did not describe documents at all.

There are exceptions for public bodies from the FOIA, Ms. Swanson said, but the MCCA does not rise to those exceptions.

But Mr. Young asked if the issue did not hinge on a "threshold question" of whether the agency was a public body.

And Ms. Swanson acknowledged that if the MCCA was not a public body, then it was not subject to the FOIA.

Ms. McAllister agreed that was the essential issue and said the MCCA was not intended to be a public body.

"The Legislature can decide what is a public body," Ms. McAllister said, and it did not decide that the MCCA is a public body. The statute creating it clearly says the agency is a non-profit corporation that has no ability to interact with policymakers or to set policy. It has no state revenues and its benefits go to insurance companies.

Justice Richard Bernstein asked if it has no impact on the public, and Ms. McAllister said that it did - through its annual assessment on auto insurance -- but the same could be said of any corporation.

And even then, Ms. McAllister said, the statute allows the insurance companies to absorb the assessment by themselves and not pass it on to the motorists.

Education Board Pushes Professional Development Attached To Evaluations

As the Legislature completes work on educator evaluation changes, the new law should provide opportunities for teachers to improve based on their evaluation, the State Board of Education said in approving recommendations at its meeting Tuesday.

The board unanimously recommended the Legislature approve an evaluation system designed to improve teacher performance and student learning and that provided teachers an appeal from poor evaluations.

The board did not take a specific position on SB 103, but it urged the Legislature to retain in it all of the recommendations of the Council for Educator Effectiveness.

"The purpose of educator evaluation has never been to fire people. That is not the best practice," Deputy Superintendent Venessa Keesler said.

Rather, she said, the evaluations should show most teachers where they need to improve. "Teaching students is not a thing that's easy to do and it's not something that's static," she said. "It's about improving the effectiveness of our professionals, not about firing our way to proficiency."

Ms. Keesler acknowledged that evaluations would show some teachers that they should re-evaluate their professional choices, but she said those would be few.

But she said that those ranked ineffective remained less than 1 percent of teachers is not surprising

"I don't think that we would expect to see a significant number of our teachers who are ineffective," she said. "Most of our teachers are good teachers who can be better."

Ms. Keesler said it would be unfair at this point to draw any conclusions about the state's teacher evaluation system based on the proportions of teachers ranked highly effective, effective, minimally effective or ineffective.

"It's also important not to judge our system until we have a system," she said. "We want them to have a statewide system so that they're comparable."

The department is not urging the Legislature to adopt a single evaluation system, but is pushing to narrow down the number of tools, maybe to the four that were recommended by the Council on Educator Effectiveness that developed some of the guidance for educator evaluation systems.

Ms. Keesler noted that some 44 percent of districts are using their own evaluation system. While it is usually a modified version of one of the recommended tools, she said that still leaves teachers without comparable evaluations across districts.

Student growth should be part of the evaluation system, but Ms. Keesler said it had to be measured correctly. She said the department is urging districts to use measures beyond the state assessments.

"They may not be proficient, but that doesn't mean they haven't made growth," she said.

Board member Richard Zeile (R-Dearborn) said there are a variety if situations where a teacher's ability might not coincide with student improvement.

"Some of our lowest performing districts had the highest percentage of highly effective teachers," he said. "That might well be true."

One element of new student growth measures could be Student Learning Objectives, Norma Jean Sass, deputy superintendent for education services said in a separate presentation.

The goal of the program, which the department is currently developing, is to set goals for individual students and to measure them based on those goals.

"It's another way for the teacher to become very invested in this," Ms. Sass said.

"This is kind of an answer for those untested subjects and grades as well," Linda Forward, director of the Office of Educational Improvement and Innovation, said.

Board member Michelle Fecteau (D-Detroit) said the final system also needed to have an appeal process. She said the current plan, to allow teachers to appeal to their superintendent, was not sufficient.

She said teachers could be given poor evaluations because of their advocacy efforts rather than their actual teaching ability, and then fired based on those evaluations. "They become a target," she said. "Who's to stop that if the superintendent is complicit?"

Ms. Keesler said the department is also supporting an appeal process, but she said getting the evaluation system right could lessen the need for appeals because teachers would feel the evaluations are fair.

The board's resolution called for an appeal to an independent third party.

Districts are also at various stages in implementing evaluation systems, Ms. Keesler said. "Some well down the road," she said. "Others have been waiting for the state to provide more guidance."

She said many districts have not adopted one of the four recommended tools in part because they fear the state will mandate they use one of the others, she said.

The $12 million the department has for training on teacher evaluation will flow through intermediate school districts and will likely be concentrated on the four recommended tools, Ms. Keesler said.

She said the funds are targeted for ISDs so the training can be more targeted to the needs of the districts. Those that already have systems well underway would not need basic implementation training, she said.

The department is holding some of the funds aside for research work, Ms. Keesler said.

"There are some thigs we don't know about evaluation that would help us be smarter about educator evaluation," she said. "Administrator evaluation is an area that is far less well defined in the research; that was far less well defined in the Ball report."

Deborah Ball was chair of the educator effectiveness commission.

TEACHER TRAINING: Michigan might not have any additional colleges to train teachers under a moratorium extended Tuesday by the board.

Department officials requested that the moratorium, which technically expired in August, be renewed until they can develop a strategy for approving new institutions.

Ms. Keesler said officials are developing a plan that would allow approval of new institutions with programs in areas where the state has teacher shortages. The new moratorium is for three years, but Ms. Keesler said the department could come back to the board in as little as six months with a plan.

She said there had been some inquiries about creating new institutions by some out-of-state schools, but no official applications.

Education Board Objects To Mandatory Third Grade Retention

The state should not be requiring school districts to retain students who cannot read at third grade level, but it should require districts to have a plan to address those students, the State Board of Education said in a resolution regarding HB 4822.

Board members said retention needed to be an option, but that there was little data on the long-term effects of holding students back.

Board member Eileen Weiser (R-Ann Arbor) suggested the idea that districts be required to create a retention policy that has to be approved by the Department of Education.

"In my eyes, retention has to remain on the table because this state has fallen behind year after year after year," Ms. Weiser said.

She said having the department approve the policy would ensure students would receive the assistance the need to get to grade level once they are retained, and hopefully before retention is needed.

Ms. Weiser had recommended the board call for mandatory retention where a district does not provide an approvable plan. "If that's not in there or there's a loophole, then we're right where we're at," she said.

But other board members recommended instead that the legislation include an "enforceable" mandate for the district plan.

"There's a lot of ways that could be accomplished," Board President John Austin (D-Ann Arbor) said.

The board, in its resolution, praised the other strategies in the bill designed to improve reading proficiency.

SUBJECT MATTER STANDARDS: Mr. Whiston said new science standards would likely be ready for adoption at the next board meeting, but that social studies standards would likely wait until January.

He said there had been substantial changes to the draft standards based on public input, so the department was planning to put the revised draft out again for public comment.

Officials did recommend that the board adopt, at its next meeting, new standards for preparation of teachers of world languages. The new standards are based on American Council for the Teaching of Foreign Languages, but with Michigan-specific elements.

Senate Panel Debates Mandatory Expulsion

After a teacher's life was threatened by a student in Grand Rapids with no apparent recourse for the school district without the threat of being sued, Sen. Dave Hildenbrand developed the framework for legislation that would require a school board to expel a pupil in grade six or above who threatened to kill a school employee, volunteer or contractor.

But the American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan told the Senate Education Committee on Tuesday that it is concerned such a mandatory requirement as is outlined in SB 208, without giving discretion on a case-by-case basis, could result in poorer student outcomes and potentially more people in jail.

In addition to mandatory expulsion for threatening someone's life, a school district would not have to spend more money to provide instructional services to a permanently expelled student than the amount of per-pupil payment the school district receives, SB 208 stipulates. And school boards would be required to report all such threats to law enforcement officials and prosecutors.

The now-retired teacher that prompted the legislation, Diane Jelke, said she and other teachers and counselors did as much as they could to give the superintendent of the district reason to expel the student in question given the situation, but the district's attorney feared a lawsuit such that the verbal threat that was made - despite the attempted physical assault - was not enough to expel the student.

While sympathetic to her story, some senators were concerned about the grander implications such a law could have on students and the way schools operate. And Sen. Darwin Booher (R-Evart) said that he was concerned the bill did not also include community colleges, especially given recent events elsewhere.

"The evidence shows these types of one-size fits all policies do more to harm student outcomes," said Rodd Monts, field director for the ACLU of Michigan. "When these serious incidents occur, school districts should have the tools of whether some other exclusion ... is necessary. We ask you include discretion in this legislation, that each case be reviewed against a set of exceptions."

He said that while he and the ACLU can appreciate that there will be cases where the removal of the student is best for all involved, his organization asks that such an option not be mandatory. He said what is threatening to one person may not be to another, or in some cases, the students can be taught to be better as individuals and members of society.

"There are a number of advocacy organizations that provide students and parents the help they need in these cases where (schools) don't know what to do," he said. "You can't simply suspend and expel your way out of problems."

ECONOMICS CREDIT: The committee did report HB 4390 with unanimous approval. The bill would allow one-half credit of personal economics or financial literacy to satisfy the Michigan Merit Curriculum for economics.

ONLINE PROTECTION: With another week of no testimony on SB 510, which would create the Student Online Personal Protection Act to essentially protect certain student information from being amassed by the operator of the system or sold, committee chair Sen. Phil Pavlov (R-St. Clair) said he would allow the bill one more week in committee before voting it out.

Education Board Urges No Guns In Schools

Legislation to allow only those with concealed pistol licenses to have firearms in schools, provided they remain hidden, still goes too far, the State Board of Education said Tuesday in a rare split vote.

The board, in a 7-1 vote, supported HB 4261 to prohibit openly carrying firearms in schools and opposed SB 442 that would end open carry in but allow those permits to concealed carry in schools and a variety of other venues currently considered gun-free.

"This is something I have to spend way too much time thinking about: what happens when someone comes on campus with a gun," said board Vice President Casandra Ulbrich (D-Rochester Hills), who develops emergency management plans for Macomb Community College.

Ms. Ulbrich heads the board's legislative committee and wrote the resolution.

"There is no place for guns in schools," Board President John Austin (D-Ann Arbor) said. "If guns are around, they are going to be used, even if by accident."

Board member Eileen Weiser (R-Ann Arbor) said she had a "unique perspective" on the issue given that her child had armed guards at school while her husband served as an ambassador.

"I will be voting for this, but the clash between personal rights and children's rights is there," Ms. Weiser said.

Board member Richard Zeile (R-Dearborn) said the proposal infringes on the right to bear arms and urged leaving the decision to the local districts.

"I'm just not sure that we can speak across the board for every school culture," he said.

And he indicated allowing weapons into the buildings could have stopped some of the recent shootings.

"It's no accident that many of these shootings have taken place in in areas where guns are outlawed and only the outlaws have guns," he said.

Michael Shibler, superintendent of Rockford Public Schools, said during public comment that he would not want anyone other than police and security staff to try to decide whether a person is dangerous.

"You cannot expect an employee of our building ... to be able to assess a person coming into our building, that person's mental state," he said.

The district instead built security vestibules in all of its buildings and visitors must be allowed past those. "Something like that is going to protect as best we can," he said.

Education Board Calls For Blood Lead Testing For Flint Children

All school children in Flint should have their blood tested for lead given the recent water issues there, the State Board of Education said in a resolution Tuesday.

The board called for the state to provide the blood tests in the schools or other locations convenient to parents, and to not charge the parents for it.

"These parents need to know what they dealing with at this point," board Vice President Casandra Ulbrich said in moving a resolution calling for legislation. The final resolution simply called for action.

The resolution was the result of a statement issued Tuesday by board member Pamela Pugh (D-Saginaw) calling on the Department of Education to work with the Department of Health and Human Services and others to be sure the blood tests are offered.

Ms. Pugh also called on the board and Superintendent of Public Instruction Brian Whiston to work with the School Reform/Redesign Office, now in the Department of Technology, Management and Budget, to prevent any future state takeovers of school districts.

"Unless we interject, areas in Michigan will continue to live under the threat of becoming U.S. sacrifice zones, where costs are cut, budgets are balanced, and profits are made at the expense of the health and wellbeing of our children, especially our most burdened children living in low-income families," Ms. Pugh said in her statement.

Deputy Superintendent Kyle Guerrant said the department only had authority over such issues where it provides grants funding, but he said later in the meeting that efforts were under way to provide the testing free to Flint residents.

Cotter Rebuts Presumptive Parole Criticism

House Speaker Kevin Cotter already led his chamber in support of presumptive parole measures in HB 4138, but with Attorney General Bill Schuette expressing his opposition loudly during the past week, Mr. Cotter released a statement of support Tuesday.

"Presumptive parole is a responsible way to reform our broken prison system and protect the rights and safety of Michigan residents. Contrary to many reports, the proposed bill simply requires parole boards to give a compelling reason to deny parole when prisoners with a high probability of success have completed their minimum sentence," Mr. Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) said.

The House passed HB 4138 earlier this month despite Mr. Schuette's objections. Mr. Schuette said on Michigan Public Television's "Off the Record" last week that the bill would allow for violent criminals to be released from prison early. Mr. Schuette has also said the release of prisoners outlined in the bill is automatic and the parole board is not able to determine risks and dangers of each prisoner.

But the House Fiscal Agency analysis says the measures in the bill would not be automatic. Under the bill, compelling reasons against presumptive parole include: objective and verifiable evidence that a victim would be caused harm by release; the prisoner has a pending felony charge; and the there is evidence the prisoner would be a danger to society if released, among other reasons.

"The process is even simplified for parole boards by filtering out prisoners who don't have a high enough probability of success, including repeat offenders and prisoners who face additional charges," Mr. Cotter said. "Any parole board willing to deny a man his freedom and keep him locked up beyond the court-ordered sentence ought to at least have a reason for doing so."

State Names Companies For New Medicaid Care Contract

The 11 managed care companies which will be able to provide Medicaid coverage to an estimated 1.7 million people in the state beginning in January have been named by the Department of Health and Human Services.

The companies will handle recipients in 10 different regions across the state, called by the department "Prosperity Regions," and the most populous areas will see more companies competing for Medicaid recipients.

Region 1, which is the Upper Peninsula, will have just one company open to handle recipients: the Upper Peninsula Health Plan.

Four companies - McLaren Health Plan, Meridian Health Plan of Michigan, Molina Healthcare of Michigan and United Healthcare Community Plan - will compete in all the remaining regions.

The other companies open to Medicaid recipients are Blue Cross Complete of Michigan, Priority Health Choice, HAP Midwest Health Plan, Aetna Better of Michigan, Harbor Health Plan and Total Healthcare.

Dems Call For Snyder To Fire DPS EM Earley Over Flint Water Crisis

Michigan Democratic Party Chair Brandon Dillon on Tuesday said Governor Rick Snyder should remove Darnell Earley as the emergency manager for Detroit Public Schools because of his decision as emergency manager in Flint to move the city temporarily to the Flint River as the city's source of drinking water.

That water received insufficient treatment to prevent corrosion, causing lead to leach into the water. Now the city will switch back to the Detroit water system until the water pipeline to Lake Huron through a new local authority is complete.

"This catastrophe began with the governor's appointed emergency manager, and as much as Governor Snyder would like to pretend, this is not a matter of negotiating at the boardroom table. This is a situation where you pay for your mistakes and put those responsible on the chopping block," Mr. Dillon said in a statement.

Mr. Snyder, asked whether Mr. Earley should be replaced at DPS, said that he was no longer the emergency manager in Flint and that local Flint officials had decided long before Mr. Snyder put the city under an emergency manager to switch water sources as well as designated the Flint River as its backup source.

Powdered Alcohol Ban Heading To Governor's Desk

The House on Tuesday passed a bill banning powdered alcohol in the state, readying it for the Senate to present to Governor Rick Snyder.

SB 240 cleared the House 102-3 with no changes from the Senate version.

The bill would prohibit the sale, distribution and possession of powdered alcohol. Other states have already banned the product, and other states - including New York and Ohio - are considering bans.

PETTALIA EYEING SPEED LIMIT VOTE BEFORE THANKSGIVING: The House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee could vote on legislation to raise speed limits on some highways and freeways before the recess for Thanksgiving and the start of firearm deer hunting season.

Rep. Peter Pettalia (R-Presque Isle), the committee chair, said he has been surprised at the level of interest from the committee in pursuing the legislation. He anticipated changes to the legislation, but that it possible it would move on an amended version.

IPPSR NAMES NEW DIRECTOR: Former Treasurer Doug Roberts Sr. is retiring from his post as director of the Michigan State University Institute for Public Policy and Social Research and MSU associate professor Matt Grossmann has been named as the new director.

CIVIL RIGHTS DIRECTOR: After Monday evening's meeting, the Civil Rights Commission still had three candidates to succeed retiring Director Matt Wesaw. The commission reviewed three candidates who were inadvertently not in an initial list of resumes, but did not consider any of them worthy of an interview.

Names of the candidates to be interviewed are to be released later this week.

Subject: NEWS UPDATE--House Approves Flint Water Fix

Wednesday, October 14, 2015, 08:43 PM

House Approves Flint Water Fix

The House unanimously voted this evening to approve $9. 35 million of state funds to return Flint to the Detroit water system and pay for additional state staff in the city's schools to gauge exposure to lead, handle evaluation and protocols on drinking water and to assist with plumbing engineers.

Governor Rick Snyder last week called for state funds to return the city to drawing water from the Detroit system and ending a disastrous move to pull water from the Flint River, as well as funds to pay for additional state staffers from the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Environmental Quality and the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs working in the city.

The supplemental (HB 4102) allocates $6 million to get the city back on Detroit's water system; $300,000 for DEQ's drinking water and environmental health services; $1 million for DEQ's laboratory services; $1 million for DHHS emergency services to purchase and distribute water to Flint residents; $850,000 for follow up services for children, including testing lead levels and care for those with abnormal levels; and $200,000 for plumbing inspections.

Insufficient corrosion controls for water drawn from the river – which is inherently more corrosive than water drawn from Lake Huron, where the Detroit system draws its water – caused lead from the city's old service lines to leach into the water, leading to lead levels in the water exceeding the federal standard to trigger remediation and to elevated lead levels in the blood of some Flint children.

Tentative Deals Reached On State Employees Contracts

The state has reached tentative agreements with its bargaining units on new contracts for state employees.

Two unions - the Michigan Corrections Organization and the Michigan State Employees Association - confirmed Wednesday the major aspects of the tentative deals between the state and their unions: a one-year contract for wages and health care starting October 1, 2016, that provides a 1 percent base wage increase, and 1.5 percent lump sum payment for employees in October 2016.

Sources told Gongwer News Service the same provisions apply to tentative agreements between the state and other unions representing state employees.

The Service Employees International Union 517M also announced a tentative agreement but did not publicly offer details.

Officials with the United Auto Workers Local 6000, the state's largest employee union, did not return calls for comment.

"While this agreement isn't perfect, it maintains key pieces of our contract that members said were very important to them, such as their health care costs," MCO President Tom Tylutki said in a statement. "Our negotiations centered on the issues members told us were important. Health care is their number one concern."

The agreements are merely tentative and still require ratification from union members as well as approval from the Civil Service Commission.

But presuming union members ratify them, it will set one key piece of the upcoming 2016-17 fiscal year budget.

Other portions of the contracts would last the traditional three years. However, the Office of State Employer pushed for a one-year deal on the wages and health care components out of concern about what will happen with the federal excise tax on premium health care plans, MCO said in a bulletin to its members.

That is the so-called Cadillac tax in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. Under that law, starting with the 2018 tax year, if the aggregate cost of the health care coverage an employer provides exceeds a statutory dollar limit, then the excess is subject to a 40 percent excise tax.

The idea behind the tax was to reduce health care spending. But it is providing a rare point of agreement between Democratic supporters of the law and Republicans who have long called for the Affordable Care Act's repeal. Unions and Democrats have said the tax should be repealed, as have Republicans and business groups, but it is unclear what will happen.

A spokesperson for the Office of the State Employer declined to comment.

Meekhof Slams Schuette On Presumptive Parole; Snyder Also Jumps In

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } faced heat from Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } Wednesday regarding legislation pending in the Senate on presumptive parole, and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } also defended the legislation.

In the past week, Mr. Schuette has launched a campaign-style assault on the legislation, referring to it as "early" release, "catch and release" and "autopilot parole." Supporters of the bill have said he is just totally wrong in his characterization of the bills.

"He's been out there on a limb on this, throwing out a direct line and saying stuff like it's anti-cop, which was over the top, and he and I had that discussion yesterday," Mr. Meekhof (R-West Olive) said of Mr. Schuette. "He's certainly within his right to comment on public policy. (But) he doesn't make public policy, he just follows what we do."

Still, Mr. Schuette's fusillade against the legislation may be having an impact. Mr. Meekhof said his caucus is voicing considerable concern about it.

Mr. Schuette has been relentless on the issue. Last week, on WKAR's "Off the Record," he said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB413801" } was "elitist" because those who live in nicer areas would have fewer worries about criminals being released back into society (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542010105" }). And his Twitter account gives updates seemingly every hour or two about "autopilot parole" and examples of parolees re-offending once released.

"Public safety is the first responsibility of government. Autopilot release of violent offenders is bad for our neighborhoods, cities and small towns," he said Tuesday in a joint statement with Genesee County Prosecutor David Leyton, his Democratic opponent in 2010 for attorney general. "We cannot build a better, stronger, safer Michigan if our public safety is threatened."

Mr. Schuette and Mr. Meekhof are also potential rivals for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in 2018 when Mr. Snyder cannot seek re-election.

Asked if he told Mr. Schuette to keep his nose out of the matter, Mr. Meekhof responded, "I said it was probably not a wise idea to talk the way he talked about the caucus on the other side. He said he'd take that under advisement."

Mr. Meekhof said he was unsure whether Mr. Schuette had apologized to the House members who drafted and supported HB 4138, which passed the House earlier this month 67-39 and currently sits in the Senate Government Operations Committee chaired by Mr. Meekhof.

"But he probably ought to think about how he treats everybody in general, and if he really wants to get public policy done, the best effort would be to work with people," Mr. Meekhof said.

Schuette spokesperson Andrea Bitely declined to comment on Mr. Meekhof's comments.

In addition to comments by Mr. Meekhof, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } expressed support of the measure in prepared remarks. This came a day after House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant) also felt compelled to defend the legislation against Mr. Schuette's criticism.

"Michigan needs a smarter criminal justice system that doesn't simply punish people who commit crimes, but frees up resources that can instead be used on effective efforts to reduce criminal activity and make our communities safer," Mr. Snyder said. "House Bill 4138 creates consistency in parole decisions for low-risk offenders by ensuring that they are all subject to the same standards when being considered for parole."

Mr. Snyder also noted the long-term impact of the change could be housing about 3,600 fewer low-risk felons in state prisons a decade from now, freeing up some $80 million "that can be reinvested in preventing crime rather than continuing to keep low-risk offenders behind bars after they have served their minimum sentence."

HB 4138 currently awaits action in the Senate Government Operations Committee, chaired by Mr. Meekhof, who said he had a "healthy discussion" with his caucus on the matter on Wednesday.

"We're looking at this presumptive parole along with some other corrections reform. Senator Proos has some great ideas that we're probably going to combine with it and come up with a better package," he said.

But Mr. Meekhof also admitted that there was "a lot of concern" among his caucus members, especially since the issue has always started in the House, even last term.

"They needed a lot of information to even understand the terms that were being talked about because we really haven't studied this at all in our caucus," he said.

Given the expectation that { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=102801&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph) would lead on another package of corrections reform, Mr. Meekhof said it would be "a little while" before there would be any action on the issue in the Senate, though specifics beyond that were not discussed.

On Roads, Meekhof, Greimel Trade Barbs As Meeting Canceled

Wednesday was meant to be a cooling off day following Tuesday's impasse on talks to generate $1.2 billion in new funds for roads, but instead the disputes continued.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive) said he was surprised at remarks by House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268401&locid=1" } (D-Auburn Hills) on road funding talks and how a proposal that the Legislative Quadrant may have on the table is insufficient.

The problem continues to be whether and how to provide income tax relief as a sweetener to an expected gasoline tax increase (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542030101" }).

"He sat in the same room, saw the same spreadsheets I did and understood that the way we're doing it by the redirection of revenue going a little bit at a time and tax rollback only when there is over-the-top revenue," Mr. Meekhof said midday Wednesday. "He saw that it worked, so I'm not quite sure where he's coming up with his assertion that it's cutting anything."

The quadrant meeting scheduled for noon was canceled. Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel said it was too soon on the heels of Tuesday's meeting, after which Mr. Snyder declared the talks at an impasse. But Ms. Wurfel said Mr. Snyder would continue talking to leaders on the issue.

Mr. Meekhof said the rollback has been on the table the whole time, "and now at the 11th hour (Mr. Greimel) wants it removed," Mr. Meekhof said. "I'm not going to remove it."

The income tax rollback passed by the Senate helped to garner some Republican votes for the meat of the legislation that seeks, in part, a gas tax hike. The Senate plan is complicated, only allowing a reduction in the tax if revenues grow and putting no bottom on how far the income tax rate could fall.

"The only dispute is, is it the rate of inflation or a little bit more than the rate of inflation?" Mr. Meekhof said of the rollback likely to be included in a final deal on road funding. "But it's the same mechanics."

Asked if he felt as though Mr. Greimel's concerns were "coming out of nowhere," Mr. Meekhof said the first he had heard of such a concern came Tuesday. But he said the Senate stands ready and willing to work on a plan.

"We sent over a plan with an income tax rollback, specifically protecting the things we think are important, and dedicating money towards roads. I think that was a good plan," he said.

Mr. Meekhof said Mr. Greimel ought to "find a way to compromise with Speaker Cotter and get it done."

But Mr. Meekhof wouldn't go so far as to say that if a roads solution doesn't get done soon that it would be solely Mr. Greimel's fault. Pointing fingers, he said, doesn't solve the problem.

"We're trying to solve the problem, and throwing mud around isn't going to make it better or give us a better opportunity to do it," he said.

Greimel spokesperson Katie Carey said Mr. Greimel was disappointed when the governor canceled the quadrant meeting originally scheduled for Wednesday.

On Mr. Meekhof's comments, Ms. Carey said: "We respectfully disagree with the Senate majority leader. We were always concerned with the hit to the General Fund."

Ms. Carey noted public schools, safety and other Democratic priorities are funded through the General Fund.

She also said an income tax cut is going to help the wealthier residents of the state.

"It is not going to help low-income Michiganders," she said.

She also said the Democrats are trying to find a roads solution that focuses mostly on roads.

"We want something that is more concrete that will be a long-term financially sustainable solution to fix the roads," she said.

Cotter spokesperson Gideon D'Assandro said Mr. Cotter and Mr. Snyder met Wednesday and discussed goals on the issue moving forward. Mr. Cotter remains hopeful talks will resume, Mr. D'Assandro said.

House Approves Nearly $10M For Flint Water

The House unanimously voted Wednesday evening to approve $9.35 million to return Flint to the Detroit water system and pay for additional state staff in the city's schools to gauge exposure to lead, handle evaluation and protocols on drinking water and to assist with plumbing engineers.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB410201" } passed the House 105-0.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said in a statement he attended House session Wednesday and told them the importance of passing the legislation.

"The people of Flint have the same right to clean, safe drinking water as residents in every district," he said. "I appreciate my colleagues on both sides of the aisle recognizing this and moving swiftly to secure resources. This is an important step necessary to fix the current crisis, and once this is complete, it's important that our next priority is getting to the bottom of how this happened. We need to make sure this never happens again."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } last week called for state funds to be used return to drawing water from the Detroit system and ending a disastrous move to pull water for the city from the Flint River and to pay for additional state staffers from the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Environmental Quality and the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs working in the city.

The supplemental appropriations allocates $6 million to get the city back on Detroit's water system; $300,000 for DEQ's drinking water and environmental health services; $1 million for DEQ's laboratory services; $1 million for DHHS emergency services to purchase and distribute water to Flint residents; $850,000 for follow up services for children, including testing lead levels and care for those with abnormal levels; and $200,000 for plumbing inspections.

Of the $9.35 million allocated, $7.15 million is from the General Fund.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" }, chair of the House Appropriations Committee, said he was pleased to see a unanimous vote for the bill.

"There is a time in this Legislature that we have to have statesmanship and stateswomanship and this was one of those times. This is a public health emergency in Flint," he said.

Mr. Pscholka said some members speculated whether the funds should come from the Budget Stabilization Fund, but said that was not necessary.

"We are in a fiscal position in order to handle something like this," he said.

Insufficient corrosion controls for water drawn from the river, which is inherently more corrosive than water drawn from Lake Huron, where the Detroit system draws its water, caused lead from the city's old service lines to leach into the water, leading to lead levels in the water exceeding the federal standard to trigger remediation and to elevated lead levels in the blood of some Flint children.

The $6 million will go toward a contract between the city and the Detroit system to pay for water service until next summer when a new regional pipeline to Lake Huron is expected to be completed. The Mott Foundation is putting up $4 million and the city of Flint the remaining $2 million.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS: The House unanimously passed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB484301" } Wednesday, which would protect minors seeking medical treatment, or helping a minor seek medical treatment, for an overdose or other drug-related illness or injury from possession charges.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville) introduced the bill in response to the loss of Mason Mizwicki, a Watervliet teenager whose mother, Lori Mizwicki, has been an advocate for greater awareness of the prescription drug problem.

"Even taking up the legislation has helped to start much-needed conversations about the problem," he said in a statement. "It's not isolated to one town or one portion of the state. This can happen to any teen, anywhere. We have to keep a spotlight on the issue."

The bill now goes to the Senate for consideration.

Third Grade Reading Bill Delayed In House With Votes Short

The House spent nearly 7 hours Wednesday attempting to gather enough votes to pass a bill designed to get third grade students reading proficiently, but eventually called it quits with a positive outlook on the bill's chances Thursday.

"Very definitely," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=285601&locid=1" } (R-Park Township), sponsor of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB482201" } when asked if she thought the bill would pass Thursday.

"We're working really hard and a lot of our members had questions today, so we are in the process of answering a lot of those tomorrow," she told reporters after the long session.

Indeed, Gideon D'Assandro, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant), had earlier told reporters the questions coming from members were overwhelming and needed more time to be properly answered.

Both Democratic and Republican House members were in and out of the chamber on Wednesday, clearly attempting to come to some kind of agreement on the bill.

At about 7:30 p.m. the Democrats went into caucus, when they returned to session the House voted on the Flint water fix and then adjourned shortly after.

Ms. Price said it is hard to say what kind of changes might be made to the bill before final passage.

She said members didn't understand how much interaction there would be with the child once they have been identified as having a reading deficiency.

Ms. Price also said some members were concerned because students who were making progress in reading should be promoted from third grade.

"But if you are in third grade and you're still reading at first grade level and you've made progress since the beginning of first grade, is that enough progress?" She said. "You still need to, when you get into fourth grade, be able to read to learn. And if you're not there yet, it's going to be more difficult."

Katie Carey, spokesperson for House Democrats, agreed that there are a lot of questions and concerns from members. She said she is hopeful the chamber can come up with the votes to pass the bill Thursday.

Ms. Carey said Democratic members are looking for some changes in the retention piece of the bill and parental involvement.

"In the end we all have the same goal for this legislation. It's just a matter of how do you get there and what those look like," she said.

The bill, as reported form committee, would retain some third-graders who are reading more than a grade level behind, but it also provides for many intervention services before the third grade assessment and outlines "good cause" exemptions.

Similar legislation was controversial last term and was never able to be voted on by the full House.

Kosowski Proposes Sports Gambling For Road Funding

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=312601&locid=1" } on Wednesday told the House Regulatory Reform Committee one way to get more funding for the state's roads and bridges is to legalize sports gambling and simulcasting horse races at casinos in the state.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB446901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB447001" } would allow casinos to accept wagers on sporting events, remove the current prohibition on televising simulcast horse races at casinos and allow for wagers on the races as well.

Mr. Kosowski (D-Westland) said he would be open to expanding the bill to horse racing tracks in the state.

To actually become law, the bills have several obstacles to overcome. First, a two-thirds majority is needed from both chambers and would need voter approval during the general election. Additionally, a federal court found that New Jersey's efforts to legalize sports betting violated federal law.

But Mr. Kosowski said the court is going to re-hear the case and there is a chance the original decision would be overturned.

"There are bookies everywhere. We all know this. Why not regulate it?" Mr. Kosowski said.

Originally, Mr. Kosowski intended to use the legislation to get more road funding. But he said as he has done more research, he would like some of the revenue generated to go to the race tracks in the state, and some funds to go to gambling addiction treatment and prevention.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=219701&locid=1" } (R-Onekama), chair of the committee, asked Mr. Kosowski what kind of support he had for the bill, noting that he didn't have any co-sponsors. Mr. Kosowski said he doesn't ask for co-sponsors and he believes the support is there.

Joe Asher, CEO of William Hill U.S., a bookmaking company, told the committee regulating the business is best.

Mr. Asher said suspicious activity can be reported and investigated in real time. And, he said, since it is the company's money being used there is incentive to call and report such activity.

"Oversight and protection do not occur in Michigan, however, because the illegal operators ...exist, and are not regulated," he said.

Mr. Asher said if casinos outsource the bookmaking there is little risk to them because companies such as his often front the cost.

He also said there may be losing days or weeks in the business, but there are very few losing months.

George Kutlenios, president of the Michigan Horseman's Benevolent and Protective Association, told the committee in June 2014 that Michigan thoroughbred horses returned to the Hazel Park raceway and saw 10,000 fans. He said attendance on regular days has consistently averaged 6,000 people.

Mr. Kutlenios said he appreciates the bill but would like to see a provision creating a relationship between any venue wishing to simulcast thoroughbred racing and a licensed state track to "ensure sustainability and quality of Michigan thoroughbred racing, and the resulting support to the state's agricultural industry can continue."

MMA AND BOXING REGULATIONS: The committee did report { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15201" }

and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15401" } regulating professional boxing, professional or amateur mixed martial arts or similar "unarmed combat."

The responsibilities of the Michigan Unarmed Combat Commission are outlined in SB 152, and that commission, alongside the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, would have jurisdiction over all boxing or MMA contests. The legislation also revises and establishes new regulations concerning the conduct of the events, as well as revises fee amounts for licenses to have such events.

Among the regulations are ensuring a contestant has been drug tested and having an on-site inspector. Women would also be required to submit a negative pregnancy test before competitions.

Michigan Chamber, Which Backed Peabody In 2014, Endorses Howell In 82nd

The Michigan Chamber announced on Wednesday its endorsement of Republicans Mary Whiteford in the 80th House District and Gary Howell in the 82nd House District, where former Reps. Cindy Gamrat and Todd Courser are running for re-election, respectively.

Mary Whiteford of Casco Township lost to Ms. Gamrat (R-Plainwell) in the 2014 Republican primary for the seat. Ms. Gamrat was expelled from the House last month but has said the voters deserve a voice in the process and is attempting to win her job back.

"Mary Whiteford will be a strong supporter of job creation and economic growth and we are pleased to endorse her in this special election," said Michigan Chamber President and CEO Rich Studley, in a statement. "The residents of Allegan County deserve better representation. We believe Whiteford possesses the experience and strength of character necessary to serve the 80th House District well."

Ms. Whiteford also has the endorsement of the Great Lakes Education Project and the Grand Rapids Chamber of Commerce political action committee.

Mr. Howell of North Branch is the Lapeer County Intermediate School District president and is taking on 11 other candidates in the 82nd District primary, including Mr. Courser (R-Lapeer), who resigned before he was able to be expelled from the House.

"Gary Howell understands the importance of pursuing policies based on individual freedom, incentive and opportunity to keep Michigan moving forward," said Jim Holcomb, senior vice president and general counsel for the Michigan Chamber, in a statement. "If elected, Howell will provide the residents of Lapeer County with the effective representation they deserve."

Endorsements in the 82nd District are split up more than in the 80th District. Former Rep. Kevin Daley has endorsed Chris Tuski of Lapeer, who is a farmer and volunteer firefighter. And GLEP has endorsed Jan Peabody of Lapeer, who lost in the 2014 primary to Mr. Courser.

In the 2014 Republican primary, the state Chamber endorsed Ms. Peabody. It did not endorse in the 80th.

The November 3 special election primary comes as Ms. Gamrat and Mr. Courser were participating in an extramarital affair together while serving in the House. An internal House Business Office investigation then found the two were misusing state resources to attempt personal and political gains.

Revenue From Increased Hunting, Licensing Fees Less Than Expected

Revenue generated from the increase in hunting and fishing license fees is about $5 million less than expected, Department of Natural Resources { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=302901&locid=1" } told the House Appropriations Committee on Wednesday.

Mr. Creagh said the department expected $18 million from the change in fees in the 2014-15 fiscal year, but only saw $13 million. And in the 2013-14 fiscal year, which included seven months of the new fee structure, the department expected $11.8 million in new revenue, but only received $7.8 million.

Austin Scott, the House Fiscal Agency analyst for the DNR, said he expects to receive more revenue numbers for the fiscal year that ended two weeks ago.

Mr. Creagh said the changes in fees also changed buying patterns, as the licenses are shorter term rather than annual. He also said the increase in the out-of-state licenses has affected those hunters coming into the state.

A non-resident hunter must purchase a $150 base license and then purchase additional licenses for the species they wish to hunt, which range from $8 to $25. Out-of-state fishing licenses also increased from $42 to $67.

But, Mr. Creagh told the committee, the state is not out of line in its fees compared to neighboring states, and the fees are a bargain compared to states out west.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=316901&locid=1" } (R-Bloomfield Hills) said many groups encouraged the increase in fees when the Legislature began considering them and noted it may simply take time for the increases to set in.

LANDFILL ODOR VIOLATIONS: The committee reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB478301" } , which would increase penalties under Michigan's waste management laws for first and second violations of the law from $10,000 and $25,000 each day, to $25,000 and $75,000, respectively.

The bill cleared the committee 25-0, with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=322301&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) and { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=248901&locid=1" } (D-Sterling Heights) abstaining.

Mr. Yanez said he abstained from voting because the Department of Environmental Quality is working on updating the waste management laws and an additional series of bills could come up.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville), chair of the committee, said he looks forward to working with Mr. Yanez on the issue, because he does not believe the bill increasing the fees will be the last piece of legislation on the issue.

The Michigan Waste and Recycling Association was opposed to the bill, saying it would increase the fines for all firms and all violations, including compost facilities and municipal properties.

Mr. Pscholka, however, said the fines have not been increased since 1987.

"This is not out of the ordinary," he said. "This is something we should have been doing all along."

Mr. Pscholka introduced the bill in response to ongoing odor issues and a citation by the DEQ for inadequate daily cover by the Orchard Hill Landfill in Southwest Michigan.

"Let's go have a barbeque in one of these neighborhoods," he said in a statement. "You have to have a real sense of what it is like to have this in your backyard, for years. If you're not willing to put a little more pressure on these bad actors, you're saying you'd be willing to put a down payment on a house here."

Civil Rights Could Again Select Former Commissioner

The Department of Civil Rights could potentially have three of its four most recent directors also be members of the commission that heads it.

Among the three candidates to be interviewed to succeed retiring { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=350501&locid=1" } is Agustin Arbulu, who succeeded Mr. Wesaw on the commission in January 2013. He left the commission earlier this month and has yet to be replaced.

Mr. Arbulu is president of Metro Care Services, which provides health care and legal consulting in the Detroit area.

The other Michigan candidate is Portia Roberson, who is group executive for ethics and civil rights for the city of Detroit. Ms. Roberson was among those interviewed when Mr. Wesaw was hired and was discussed as a Democratic candidate for attorney general for the 2014 election.

And Akia Haynes is deputy director and general counsel for the Indiana Civil Rights Commission, where she has served since January 2013. She has also served as a deputy attorney general for the state, as well as a private practice attorney.

Mr. Wesaw had been a member of the commission, and so had been Kelvin Scott, who served as director from February 2009 to February 2010 when he died. Both had served as chair of the commission.

House Panel Considering Regulation Of Charity Bins

What { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=360301&locid=1" }, chair of the House Local Government Committee, had thought would be a brief discussion turned contentious as local government groups raised concerns over his legislation to regulate charity donation bins.

All agreed the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was clear that the bins could not be prohibited (the court found they were charity speech and so protected under the First Amendment), but locals wanted to retain the right to oversee their location and maintenance.

Mr. Chatfield (R-Levering) said the goal of his bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB486201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB486301" }) is to unify regulation of the bins, which allow people to leave clothing, books and other materials for the charity listed on the side.

Local governments had tried to ban the bins, arguing, as some still did Wednesday, that they attract not only legitimate donations but also trash dumping.

Suzanne Schultz, managing director of design, development and community engagement for the city of Grand Rapids, brought pictures of bins overflowing with various materials.

Ms. Schultz said allowing cities to control the locations through zoning would help, but she said communities needed to be able to issue civil infractions for bins that become a nuisance.

"Courts are not going to take this up if it's misdemeanors," she said, echoing others who had argued the penalties as laid out in the legislation would be too costly to enforce.

But Judy Allen with the Michigan Townships Association said limiting the location regulation to zoning would limit townships' ability to regulate the locations because of their lesser planning powers, and it could potentially leave some bins unregulated.

"Everyone who has a bin, they would be grandfathered in and be a nonconforming use," she said.

She also joined others in urging against a cap on the annual licensing fee. The bill provides for no more than $75, but since local governments cannot charge more than their costs anyway, she said taxpayers would have to subsidize the system if costs rise above that cap.

Mr. Chatfield said his goal with the bill was to create a system and uniformity across the state. But he also said the bills would allow communities to do some of the things their representatives had asked.

"If the bill doesn't prohibit it, there will be more things locals will be able to do," he said.

Officials with Planet Aid, which had been the defendant in the federal lawsuit, said the bill would allow their operations but would help to weed out those not caring for their bins.

Kai Nelson said his group checks its bins once a week and has systems in place to allow response within 24 hours if there is a problem reported.

But he said local government groups' call for agreements between the charity and the property owner are not necessarily workable. He said in many cases the properties where the group places collection boxes have absentee or corporate owners and a local property manager is the right person to make the agreement.

Mr. Nelson said the company would be open to provisions that would require even its existing boxes to be licensed and, if they do not meet siting requirements, moved. He said the company has already done that in some locales that have adopted regulatory ordinances.

Mr. Chatfield said he would continue to work with all of the parties to meet their concerns in the legislation.

TAX CAPTURE: In what was intended to be the primary focus of the meeting, libraries said any changes to tax increment financing authority laws have to allow them more say in captured taxes.

And Eric Lupher with the Citizens Research Council said the state needs to place more limits on the authorities.

"Libraries are having to return for more millages in the future when their revenues are being captured by tax increment finance authorities," Lance Werner with the Kent District Library, speaking for the Michigan Library Association, said. "We're living within our means but our means are being siphoned away."

He noted, for instance, that the Litchfield library loses 47 percent of its funds to tax capture.

Mr. Werner said the libraries did not object to all tax capture authorities, but they should be given more power to choose which ones are appropriate to get library revenue. Current law, he said, allows them to accept all or reject all.

"We want to work with the tax captures ... so we can explain to our investors where our money is going," he said.

He said libraries should also be permitted to opt-in for all authorities. He said some provide for library revenue to automatically be captured and require the libraries to opt out.

Mr. Lupher said future authorities need to be given a limited time to operate. While courts have ruled that tax capture for economic development is constitutional, he said TIFAs have morphed into something that might not be.

"They're being used for police and fire; they're being used for street fairs," he said.

And he said they are being routinely renewed instead of expiring when an intended project is completed.

"There should be some finality to this," he said, adding that in many cases there is also less accountability for the funds.

"Those revenues have just been pushed off budget and you don't hear about it," he said.

Mr. Lupher, pointing to issues raised with recent millages to support the Detroit Zoo and Detroit Institute of Arts, said existing authorities also should be limited to capturing the taxes that are in existence when the authority is created. To capture any new taxes should require creation of a new authority, he said.

REWARDS: The committee also began discussions on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB429201" } , which would allow county commissions to approve up to $20,000 for rewards leading to arrests for certain crimes.

He said that limit was set in 1948.

"This money falls more in line with what the value of money is today," Mr. Cochran said of the bill. "This is a little more enticing to have people come forward."

Mr. Chatfield questioned whether the bill, which addresses only counties, should be expanded to cover other local governments under the same theory.

Senate Ends Deadline To Petition For DNA Test, Trial

The Senate voted unanimously Wednesday to eliminate the deadline in the law for a defendant convicted of a felony at trial, serving prison for that felony, to petition the court for DNA testing of biological material identified during an investigation that led to his or her conviction.

Those convicted of felonies may also request a new trial based on the results of that testing under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15101" }. Currently, such a petition must be filed by January 1, 2016.

Only Michigan and Louisiana currently have sunsets on such provisions.

FIREFIGHTER CERTIFICATION: The Senate also approved { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB37201" }, which provides firefighter certification reciprocity with states that have the same certification as Michigan. The bill requires the state fire marshal to extend reciprocity certification to a firefighter from another state who seeks to work as a firefighter in Michigan as long as the individual was certified in another state after completing a program that meets or exceeds Michigan's standards.

"I have heard from many fire chiefs and local officials about how difficult and expensive it is to recruit and retain firemen in our local fire departments," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276201&locid=1" } (R-Ida), sponsor of the bill, said in a statement. "Part of the problem is that Michigan currently does not recognize out-of-state firefighter certification. This legislation will improve our local fire departments ability to protect families and staff their departments at appropriate levels."

State Unemployment Rate Falls Below National Rate For First Time Since 2000

News that Michigan's unemployment rate fell to 5 percent in September, putting it below the national unemployment rate for the first time in 15 years, brought plenty of cheers Wednesday.

The national unemployment rate in September was 5.1 percent.

"We need to stay focused on our goal, but it also is important to look back to see how far we've come. Michigan's unemployment rate was once the worst in the United States," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said in a statement. "Today we are below the national average for the first time since August 2000. This means more people in Michigan are able to use their skills and are finding fulfilling jobs to support themselves and their families, making our cities and our communities stronger in a variety of ways."

Mr. Snyder posted a photo of him from 2000 on his Twitter feed with much less gray hair and a beard to commemorate the occasion.

Employment rose for the month by 10,000, and the labor force was up, too, by 3,000.

In the past year, the unemployment rate has fallen from 6.7 percent, and employment is up by 68,000.

"Since early 2015, several key labor market indicators have shown improvement in Michigan and in the nation," Jason Palmer, director of the Bureau of Labor Market Information and Strategic Initiatives, said in a statement. "Monthly unemployment rates in the state and nation have been comparable, as have over-the-year payroll job growth rates."

Bridge Authority Has 6 Potential Bidders

The Windsor-Detroit Bridge Authority announced Wednesday that six companies had responded to its request for qualifications to build the Gordie Howe International Bridge.

The authority is now submitting the qualifications to a review panel of authority members and experts to determine the three most qualified potential bidders.

"The private sector has shown a vibrant interest in working on the Gordie Howe International Bridge project, between this RFP, the responses we received to our recent RFP for early works, as well as the recently-held Industry Days," Mark McQueen, chair of the authority's board of directors, said in a statement. "Although site preparation has already begun for the eventual construction of the new Canadian Customs plaza, businesses and travelers on both sides of the border understand that the completion of the new bridge is dependent upon the successful conclusion of the pending RFP process."

Committee Roundup

SENATE APPROPRIATIONS: The Senate Appropriations Committee on Wednesday began taking testimony on reviewing boilerplate language that requires reports of agencies that spend more than $500,000 in new or expanded programs.

The first programs up for review were making Michigan a no-wait state for senior home-delivered meals and in-home services; child welfare performance-based funding; and the Ok2Say school safety hotline.

"This is harder work than passing budgets, is going back and checking and seeing if we're delivering on our promises," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" } (R-Clarklake), whose idea it was to conduct such reviews, said in committee. "The intent of this is not necessarily to review why we did something. The intent is to review whether what we said we were going to accomplish is actually occurring."

By and large, Mr. Shirkey and other members of the committee requested more specific and detailed metrics, especially identifiable metrics like number comparisons, of all of the programs reviewed Wednesday. The committee expects to review another three programs next week, and chair { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell) recommended that members consider the practice for their own subcommittees when and where possible.

DEADLINE THURSDAY FOR LOCALS TO APPLY FOR GRANTS PROGRAM: Municipalities have until 11:59 p.m. Thursday to apply for the Financially Distressed Cities, Villages, and Townships grant program. Any city, village or township experiencing one or more conditions of "probable financial distress," under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB86501" }, the Local Financial Stability and Choice Act, is eligible to apply.

STATE CHRISTMAS TREE HAILS FROM WAKEFIELD: A 66-foot spruce from Wakefield in the Upper Peninsula will serve as the state's Christmas tree this year.

Florence Daniels is donating the tree to the state in memory of her husband, Jim Daniels, a former teacher and youth sports coach.

The tree will arrive October 31, and as per longtime tradition, be illuminated at the annual Silver Bells in the City celebration that Lansing holds to kick off the holiday season Friday, November 20.

MACMHB ANNOUNCES CEO: The executive board of the Michigan Association of Community Mental Health Boards has announced Robert Sheehan will lead the organization as chief executive officer effective immediately. Prior to his new role, he served for 18 years at the CEO of the Community Mental Health Authority of Clinton, Eaton and Ingham Counties.

Mr. Sheehan replaces Michael Vizena as CEO of MACMHB. Mr. Vizena is retiring.

"Behavioral health issues and intellectual/developmental disabilities affect so many of Michigan's residents, and are central to overall health, yet are often overlooked or stigmatized in the public eye," Mr. Sheehan said in a statement. "I look forward to the opportunity to work alongside the Association's members - hundreds of innovative provider and healthcare management organizations across the state - as they serve those in our communities with behavioral health issues and intellectual/developmental disabilities and their families."

LAND LEASES: The Department of Transportation will be leasing { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan.gov/documents/mdot/Ag_Lease_Sealed-Bid_Sale_Brochure_11-4-2015_10-7-15_502352_7.pdf" \t "blank" } of land around the state for agricultural use only.

The lease sale is scheduled for November 4 at 10 a.m. (doors open at 9 a.m.) at the Office of Aeronautics Auditorium at Capital City Airport, 2700 Port Lansing Road in Lansing.

Those interested in bidding must attend and provide a sealed bid for each parcel.

CASINO REVENUE: Two of the three Detroit casinos saw revenue increase both for the month of September and for the third quarter, the Gaming Control Board announced Wednesday.

MotorCity Casino saw the most growth, with the $35.7 million it collected in September representing a 7.5 percent increase over the same month in 2014. For third quarter, its revenue was up 3.6 percent over the same period in 2014.

MGM Grand Detroit was up 4.6 percent in September to $45.2 million and up 0.5 percent for the quarter.

Greektown Casino saw revenue decline 0.1 percent for the month to $26.6 million and 2.4 percent for the quarter.

Flint Water Funds Head To Snyder

The Senate wasted no time in approving today more than $9 million to help pay for temporarily returning the city of Flint to the Detroit water system and fund additional staffing in the city's schools to gauge the exposure to lead.

The fix came with unanimous passage of HB 4102, a supplemental appropriations bill the House passed late Wednesday.

The bill allocates $6 million to get the city back on Detroit's water system; $300,000 for the Department of Environmental Quality's drinking water and environmental health services; $1 million for the department's laboratory services; $1 million for Department of Health and Human Services emergency services to purchase and distribute water to Flint residents; $850,000 for follow-up services for children, including lead testing and care for those with abnormal levels; and $200,000 for plumbing inspections.

Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) expressed thanks for his colleagues' support in the matter. The move to pump water for the city from the Flint River without proper corrosion controls allowed lead in service lines and welds to leach into the drinking water at levels beyond those requiring remediation.

Gongwer News Service will have more on this story in Thursday's Michigan Report.

Volume #54, Report #205 -- Thursday, October 15, 2015

Most Dems Drop Support As Third Grade Reading Bill Passes

While Democrats were hopeful after a late session Wednesday they would be able to support a bill designed to get elementary students reading proficiently before entering fourth grade, in the end, House Republicans passed the bill Thursday with only three Democratic lawmakers in support.

The bill, HB 4822, cleared the chamber 57-48. Immediately after the bill's passage, both Rep. Adam Zemke (D-Ann Arbor) and House Minority Leader Tim Greimel (D-Auburn Hills) requested they be removed as co-sponsors.

Under the bill, students could be retained in the third grade if they do not test proficiently in reading. The bill does outline multiple reading intervention programs in an effort to get students reading at grade level before retention is necessary. There are also "good cause exemptions" outlined in the legislation.

Additionally, in a change adopted Thursday, the retention portion of the bill would not go into effect until the 2019-20 school year, a two year delay from what was in the reported version of the bill.

Democrats speaking on the House floor said they were concerned about the lack of parental involvement in the retention process, the negative impacts of retention and the possibility that the funding in the current year budget for literacy programs would not actually cover the costs to schools.

Mr. Zemke, who had been working with fellow Democrats and the bill's sponsor, Rep. Amanda Price (R-Park Township), on an agreement, said in his opposition speech he still considered Ms. Price a friend, though she might not feel the same.

Mr. Zemke said he was voting no because an amendment he offered, which would allow a student who has been working on an individualized reading plan since the end of second grade, but was still not proficient in reading by the end of third grade, to move on to the next grade level while still working the individualized plan, was not adopted.

"I am not going to remove the hope of a 9-year-old. Period," he said on the House floor. "You want to see what's going to happen when you paint that picture. ... They're working hard, they're playing by the rules, they're doing everything right. ... And then you take it away. What do you think they're going to do for the rest of their educational career? They're not going to try. Because they played by the rules and they got screwed anyway."

Ms. Price said she was disappointed to lose Mr. Zemke's support, but said his proposed amendment watered down the retention provisions in the bill to a point where she was no longer comfortable.

"I understand what he was saying," she said. "But right from the get-go, the line in the sand has been for people to say, 'No, you need to read.' And we can't keep promoting kids because we're not getting them where they need to be."

Ms. Price said the reason the House worked so hard to get the bill passed this week rather than working longer behind the scenes is she wanted to get it done before the Legislature finds itself in an election year and before other education policy debates, like Detroit Public Schools, come up.

According to the House Fiscal Agency analysis, in the 2013-14 school year as many as 39 percent or 42,500 third grade students did not test proficiently in reading under the Michigan Educational Assessment Program.

With the "more rigorous" National Assessment of Educational Progress test, in 2013, 69 percent of fourth-graders did not reach proficient reading levels.

Rep. Lisa Posthumus Lyons (R-Alto) said the bill is not a reactive, retention-focused measure. She said it includes many intervention programs that work to help students improve their reading.

"It is not acceptable to allow our kids to not be able to read and yet send them along their way," she said.

Rep. Harvey Santana (D-Detroit), one of the three Democrats who voted for the bill, said there is a 47 percent illiteracy rate in Detroit. He said current policies tell children in Detroit, "It's okay to be a failure."

He criticized comments from other members saying retention would emotionally impact children.

"How emotionally affected is that third-grader going to be when they grow up to be an adult with kids of their own who they cannot take care of because the system failed them?" he said.

The Great Lakes Education Project praised the passage of the bill, saying it was "a great day for school children in Michigan."

"We extend our deep appreciation to Rep. Amanda Price, the chair of the House Education Committee and the bill's primary sponsor, as well as to House leadership and those 57 members who voted to help kids today," GLEP Executive Director Gary Naeyaert said in a statement. "As the leading advocacy organization supporting this bill, we are confident Senator Phil Pavlov and the Senate Education Committee will schedule hearings soon so this common sense policy can be evaluated and passed in the Senate and then sent to the governor for his signature."

The bill outlines intervention programs for children before they go into the third grade. Students are allowed to be taught other subjects that they are proficient in - like reading and math - in a fourth grade setting, while still receiving reading interventions at the third grade level. There are also good-cause exemptions to retention outlined in the bill.

The Department of Education would be required to approve at least three reliable reading assessment systems and recommend or create a reading/literacy coach model. The reading/literacy coach would be required to undertake 11 tasks, including working with teachers to diagnose and address reading deficiency.

The bill would increase the costs for the department, but the 2015-16 fiscal year budget included $900,000 to implement the early literacy initiatives. The school aid budget also included additional funding for a portion of the implementation costs for schools.

Beginning in the 2016-17 school year, school boards and charter school boards of directors would be required to select one of the reading assessments from the MDE and provide any student with a reading deficiency at any time with a reading improvement plan and provide notice to parents about the student's reading deficiency.

Reading intervention programs for those students showing a deficiency would need to include a screening of progress at least three times per year; provide a highly effective core reading instruction; and take place during regular school hours. Parents would also receive a "read at home" plan.

Educator Evaluations Appear Finally Set As House OKs Bill

The House on Thursday passed a bill outlining teacher and administrator evaluations in the state, and the bill appears to have an easy path through the Senate and onto Governor Rick Snyder's desk.

The bill, SB 103, passed 97-8 after four months of debate in the House and many changes - following a tough debate during the 2013-14 term. The bill was initially controversial, as Sen. Phil Pavlov (R-St. Clair), chair of Senate Education Committee, took a different approach from the House versions of the legislation drafted during the last term.

Mr. Pavlov, after the bill passed Thursday, said he was comfortable where the House went with the legislation.

"They're protecting my key tenants, and that is that, one, any money that goes to the department is dedicated toward actual training," he said. "The second thing I wanted to make sure happened was it didn't water down the historic reforms we got on tenure. Thirdly, the important concept was locals would have the ability to form and choose a model that best fits their situation."

The House-passed version of the bill establishes both training requirements and options for school districts and public school academies to develop their own teacher evaluation tool or make modifications to an existing tool. Changes added Thursday stipulated the funding for training must come from the Educator Evaluation Reserve Fund

Since the bill originated in the Senate, the chamber has to concur in the House changes to send it to Governor Rick Snyder's desk.

Rep. Daniela Garcia (R-Holland), the vice chair of the House Education Committee, said the bill avoids a "one-size-fits-all" evaluation system.

"Under this legislation, school districts will have the flexibility to decide on their own evaluation standards to meet that goal," she said in a statement. "The House has included additional language that will make certain teachers, principals and superintendents are all familiar with and trained in their district's evaluation methods."

Under the bill, the Department of Education would have to establish and maintain a list of teacher and administrator evaluation tools, and the list would have to, at the very least, include the tools recommended by the Michigan Council on Educator Effectiveness in 2013. Districts do not have to use the same tool for teachers and administrators.

For teachers, beginning in the 2018-19 school year, 40 percent of the year-end evaluation would be based on student growth, with half coming from the state assessment and half coming from a local assessment.

For administrators, beginning immediately, 25 percent of the annual evaluation would be based on student growth and assessment data. The data is an aggregate of student growth data used in teacher evaluations in the district where the administrator works.

Training for teachers and administrators on evaluation tools is also required. School districts and PSAs could create a consortium to conduct the trainings. All evaluators and observers would also be required to receive training from a person who has expertise in the training tool.

A school district or public school academy could also develop its own tool, and the department would promulgate rules for how a district would submit its tool for placement on the list. Also required under the bill is for the district or PSA to publish on its website a variety of information about the evaluation tool and the evaluation process beginning in the 2016-17 school year.

Ananich On Flint Water Funds: 'This Is By No Means Over'

Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich was both heartened and relieved Thursday to have a supplemental appropriations bill unanimously approved in the Senate to provide $9.35 million to help his city of Flint get better water faster, but it was a cautious optimism as there is much left to do, he said.

Of the money, $6 million will go toward switching from the Flint River as the city's source for drinking water back to the Detroit system. Insufficient corrosion control for the river water caused lead in the service lines and pipes to leach into the water, leading to led levels above federal standards for remediation and rising levels of lead in Flint children's blood.

"As soon as we switch over to Detroit, we're not going to automatically have clean, drinkable water. We're still going to have to use the filters, still going to have to make sure they take precautions, because it takes a while to rebuild the corrosion controls against the pipes," Mr. Ananich (D-Flint) told the press after session. "I'm not an expert by any means, but it could be a few months.

"The one benefit I do think we have going forward is Flint will probably be the most tested water anywhere in the world over the next six months, as it should be, to make sure we rebuild that trust," he said.

The Senate decided quickly to take up HB 4102, as the House sent it over Wednesday evening after a unanimous vote among representatives as well.

And within hours, Governor Rick Snyder signed the bill into law, becoming PA 143 of 2015 with immediate effect.

"This funding is a coordinated response to a serious problem and I'm pleased so many parties came together to help deliver safe drinking water to the city of Flint," Mr. Snyder said in a statement. "Reconnecting to the Great Lakes Water Authority is only the first step, as the state will continue testing and inspections to ensure Flint families and children have clean water in their homes and schools."

A week ago, Mr. Snyder called on the Legislature to provide funding to the city to help it in its efforts to switch back to the Detroit water system and have staff from both the Department of Environmental Quality and the Department of Health and Human Services. During that time, and even before, there had been a lot of finger-pointing about who ought to ultimately be responsible for the crisis that has caused Flint to go on high alert due to elevated levels of lead in its water.

And many of those questions of accountability remain, Mr. Ananich said.

"(The switch) was during the period of an emergency manager, and there wasn't many decisions allowed to be made by local elected officials. I can't speak about whether they were part of the conversations or not," he said. "It was the decision of the emergency manager to switch over, a decision by a different emergency manager to stay on it, and a third emergency manager denied the request to go back.

"It definitely needs to be looked at, the emergency manager laws, make sure there's some accountability on the back-end before they leave. They shouldn't be leaving cities with such crises when they leave," Mr. Ananich said.

But the other question is who should look at what and how. Mr. Ananich said he wasn't sure yet whether the state should investigate itself (effectively), a commission should review the situation, the Legislature should make changes to existing laws or create new ones, or more.

"All those questions need to be looked at," he said. "I'm not 100 percent sure exactly what method it should be, but I think it's warranted to have a further look at what happened, what mistakes were made, and how to make sure it doesn't ever happen again in cities like Flint but also across the state.

"This isn't a victory for my community. This is a fix to a problem that never should've happened," he said.

The supplemental appropriations allocates $6 million to get the city back on Detroit's water system; $300,000 for DEQ's drinking water and environmental health services; $1 million for DEQ's laboratory services; $1 million for DHHS emergency services to purchase and distribute water to Flint residents; $850,000 for follow up services for children, including testing lead levels and care for those with abnormal levels; and $200,000 for plumbing inspections.

Of the $9.35 million allocated, $7.15 million is from the General Fund.

Driskell Leads Walberg In Third Quarter Fundraising, Gilbert Tops $200,000

The highly touted challengers to U.S. Rep. Mike Bishop and U.S. Rep. Tim Walberg posted strong fundraising totals in the third quarter, based on campaign finance reports filed Thursday.

The reports showed their Democratic challengers, Rep. Gretchen Driskell (D-Saline) and former "Little House on the Prairie" star Melissa Gilbert, with strong hauls.

But the reports also showed a number of candidates with steep hills to climb in their efforts to either be their party's nominee or to unseat the incumbent.

In what could be the closest funding race based on reports available at press time, Ms. Driskell, the latest Democrat to face off against Mr. Walberg (R-Tipton), raised $203,698 for the third quarter and $523,610 for the cycle, leaving $435,004 cash on hand.

"Working families, students, and seniors across the 7th District are standing behind our campaign, and we are really proud to be building grassroots momentum from a network of neighbors," Ms. Driskell said in a statement announcing her fundraising. "It's because of their enthusiasm and support that we'll continue to attract the resources necessary to win."

Mr. Walberg raised only $133,160 for the quarter. But he had raised $753,284 so far for the election cycle and had $922,034 in cash on hand.

In the 8th U.S. House District, Ms. Gilbert raised $200,372, all in the third quarter. She had $183,317 left in cash on hand. It was her first report since declaring her candidacy.

Mr. Bishop (R-Rochester) had not filed his reports as of press time. The deadline was 11:59 p.m. Thursday

In the 1st U.S. House District, Jerry Cannon, the Democratic nominee in 2014, appeared to have donors staying away in droves. His first report for his new committee showed he raised only $3,640 and spent nothing. Mr. Cannon created a new campaign committee for his second run and did not show the transfer of any funds from those coffers, having spent the full $1 million he raised.

Former Michigan Democratic Party Chair Lon Johnson, expected to be the frontrunner for the Democratic nomination, reported $350,977, all raised in the latest quarter. Of that, he had $293,265 left in cash.

U.S. Rep. Dan Benishek (R-Crystal Falls) is not seeking re-election and so far no Republicans have stepped up to replace him.

Sen. Tom Casperson (R-Escanaba), one of those named as a possible candidate, has retained an active campaign account from his prior run for the seat and reported raising a net $180 so far for the election cycle (he returned $2,700 in contributions). He showed $12,759 in cash on hand, but $22,570 in debt.

Paul Clements, so far the sole Democrat challenging U.S. Rep. Fred Upton (R-St. Joseph), had $135,374 in cash after raising $154,808 so far toward the election, $151,126 last quarter. He has spent $29,100 toward his second effort to unseat Mr. Upton.

Mr. Upton had not yet filed his reports, but historically has raised substantially more than Mr. Clements is reporting.

In the race to succeed U.S. Rep. Candice Miller (R-Harrison Township), former Sen. Alan Sanborn reported raising just $4,070 for the third quarter and $46,337 overall. That left him $25,851 cash on hand.

Sen. Phil Pavlov (R-Saint Clair), in contrast, raised $57,349 for the quarter and $164,729 total for the cycle toward his effort to succeed Ms. Miller. He reported $126,153 cash on hand.

Detroit City Clerk Janice Winfrey, who is challenging U.S. Rep. John Conyers Jr. (D-Detroit), now the longest-serving member in the U.S. House, brought in $18,840, all in the third quarter. She had $7,900 cash on hand. Ms. Winfrey formed her committee late in the quarter, on September 21, so had little time to raise money before the close of books on September 30.

Mr. Conyers did not report much of a war chest either, but it was still substantially larger at $40,588. He raised $42,997 for the third quarter and $193,322 for the cycle.

Pavlov Introduces Bills To Prohibit Sale Of Fetal Tissue, Parts

Sen. Phil Pavlov is leading the charge in the Senate to prohibit compensation for the distribution or transfer of any portion of an embryo, fetus or neonate obtained as the result of an elective abortion, introducing two bills on the matter on Thursday that were sent to the newly created Senate Oversight Committee.

The bills come amid a controversy over Planned Parenthood charging for the costs of acquiring such tissue.

"The key is we need to protect the unborn in the state of Michigan, and these bills do that," Mr. Pavlov (R-St. Clair) said of SB 564 and SB 565.

The first bill states "a person shall not knowingly financially benefit from or receive any type of compensation for the distribution or transfer of any portion of an embryo, fetus, or neonate including any organs, tissues, or cells that were obtained as the result of an elective abortion."

Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive), who is one of the 17 Republican co-sponsors to SB 564 and SB 565, the latter of which enacts sentencing guidelines for a violation of the prohibitions in SB 564, deferred questions on the bills to Mr. Pavlov, noting that he has been in numerous conversations with various members of the caucus on the matter.

Asked about that level of prioritization in the Senate Republican caucus, Mr. Pavlov said, "The leader saw it fit to create a special committee to examine the issues of the unborn and protecting the unborn in Michigan. This is all about taking away any financial motivation to sell or traffic these elective abortion procedures."

Planned Parenthood has said repeatedly it does not sell fetal tissue, but only seeks to compensation for the costs of obtaining the tissue, storing it and transporting it.

Indeed, the Senate Oversight Committee where the bills were sent, was created in mid-September, with Sen. Peter MacGregor (R-Rockford) as chair and Senate Majority Floor Leader Mike Kowall (R-White Lake Township) as majority vice chair (See Gongwer Michigan Report, September 17, 2015).

Sen. Tonya Schuitmaker (R-Lawton) and Sen. Jim Stamas (R-Midland) are also on the committee, as well as named co-sponsors to the bills. Sen. Vincent Gregory (D-Southfield) was designated as the lone Democratic member of the committee.

Mr. Pavlov said he could not speak to specific instances of such things happening in Michigan, but pointed to the national controversy related to Planned Parenthood that he said prompted the desire to draft some kind of legislation.

The controversy, of course, happened over the summer when The Center for Medical Progress, an anti-abortion organization, secretly recorded and edited a video of Planned Parenthood's senior director of medical research, Deborah Nucatola, talking about procedural techniques to preserve certain organs that can later be donated for research purposes, which is legal. It would be illegal to sell any tissue.

She also says in the video Planned Parenthood is sensitive about being seen as gaining a profit from these donations, and will charge for shipping and other costs the clinic takes on in the course of making donations.

Planned Parenthood has denied selling organs and charged that the video was heavily edited to give a false impression.

Additionally, earlier this week, Planned Parenthood announced it would no longer accept any reimbursement as part of its fetal tissue donation program, Lori Carpentier, president and CEO of Planned Parenthood for mid and south Michigan, said Thursday.

"So it doesn't change anything that will happen for us," Ms. Carpentier said. "In order to take this off the table as a sticking point for our opponents, we're not going to take reimbursement. And to the extent we have any, we'll find ways to cover those costs ourselves."

More important to her and her organization at this point, she said, is the hope that Mr. Pavlov's legislation doesn't have any effects on the "important medical research that comes as a result of fetal tissue donation."

"I think my concern about this is the Legislature may be dinking around in areas where they are unfamiliar with," she said. "As is commonly the case, legislators put these things together ... don't create specifics and often create limbo positions."

But Mr. Pavlov said he is not sold on someone's word.

"When someone tells you you're not doing something, you require them to prove a negative," he said. "Partial birth abortion has been banned, but we just saw through a series of videos that it's still taking place. We're going to make sure we put an end to it and protect the unborn child."

Asked how the language might affect stem cell research or in vitro fertilization procedures, Mr. Pavlov said he did not think it would affect either.

"I think it's pretty clear. Part of the strength of the bill is its simplicity," he said. How it is proven that a person "knowingly" did so is not defined in the bill, however.

Mr. MacGregor did not immediately return a request for comment on when his committee might take up Mr. Pavlov's legislation, but Mr. Pavlov said he just had a conversation with Mr. MacGregor about the matter on Wednesday when the bill was still on Mr. Pavlov's desk.

Domestic Violence Package Clears House

A father who was found by "clear and convincing" evidence to have raped the mother would be denied visitation or custody under bills passed Thursday by the House that create "sensible" protections for the victims of domestic violence.

The lead bill, HB 4481, passed 101-4, would allow a court, after a fact-finding hearing where evidence presented was deemed clear and convincing, to deny custody and visitation with the child to the father.

"Michigan needs to send a message that we stand with the victims and survivors of domestic violence and rape," Rep. Lisa Posthumus Lyons (R-Alto), sponsor of the bill, said in a statement. "Too often in cases of sexual assault and domestic violence, a rapist will use the threat of seeking custody of the child to intimidate pregnant victims into not pressing criminal charges of the attack. It is unthinkable that we would allow this to occur when we have the ability to provide victims with the protection and peace of mind they need in order to heal."

The other bills in the package passed Thursday were HB 4476 and HB 4477, which passed 104-1 and would revise the service of process in actions appealed to the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals if a court order has been issued to prohibit release of the address of the party being served and make changes to the mediation process if domestic violence was involved, respectively.

HB 4478 passed 96-9 and would allow a personal protection order to include a pet. And HB 4479 passed 103-2 and would treat an assault against a pregnant woman the same as domestic violence in terms of repeated offenses.

EAA Official Pleads To Tax Evasion In Corruption Probe

The Education Achievement Authority has been added to the list of Detroit institutions subject to a Federal Bureau of Investigation corruption inquiry with the guilty plea Thursday of former Mumford High School Principal Kenyetta Wilbourn-Snapp.

The Detroit News reported Thursday that investigators had been looking into the relationship between Ms. Wilbourn-Snapp and at least one of the district's contractors.

The district, designed as part of the Snyder administration's efforts to improve school performance, has been the subject of criticism both for its efforts in that direction and for its administrative operations.

The Detroit Free Press reported Thursday afternoon that Ms. Wilbourn-Snapp had accepted a plea in relation to an investigation into kick-backs she received. The paper said documents showed a possible relationship with Allstate Sales and For-Most Educational Consulting and Training Group.

Sara Wurfel, spokesperson for the Snyder administration, declined to comment on the investigation beyond noting, as did a statement from the EAA, that it was an internal review that uncovered financial discrepancies that pointed to the alleged corruption. State and EAA officials had forwarded that information to federal law enforcement.

"Our office was in full coordination in reporting and bringing to light with appropriate state and federal law enforcement agencies," Ms. Wurfel said in an email response.

The district, created through an interlocal agreement between Detroit Public Schools and Eastern Michigan University, was intended to receive struggling schools from around the state but so far has only 15 Detroit schools.

Former Superintendent of Public Instruction Mike Flanagan had canceled the contract with the EAA to be the sole recipient for any schools taken over by the state for poor performance, in part over concerns raised that the tactics the EAA was employing were not actually improving student achievement.

The district was also slammed for spending on furnishings and travel under its initial chancellor, John Covington.

EAA supporters have been working since early in the last legislative session to codify the EAA to be clear that it had the authority to oversee schools other than in Detroit, but so far have come up short in that effort.

Dems Plan Legislation With Minimum Nurse Staffing Standards

The Michigan Nurses Association on Thursday said a poll commissioned by the group shows 80 percent of voters support having minimum staffing standards for nurses working in the state.

Currently there is no law, but Rep. Jon Hoadley (D-Kalamazoo) and Sen. Rebekah Warren (D-Ann Arbor) are planning to introduce legislation in their respective chambers.

"Michigan residents are saying loud and clear that our registered nurses are being forced to care for too many patients at once," Mr. Hoadley said. "Chronic nurse understaffing jeopardizes the care and safety of people in our hospitals every day. The only real solution is to pass a law that gives nurses enough time to spend with each patient and provide individualized care."

The Safe Patient Care Act the lawmakers plan to introduce includes implementing a staffing plan specific to each unit that adheres to minimum nurse-to-patient ratios based on research and national professional standards; limiting mandatory registered nurse overtime to instances of genuine emergencies; disclosing actual registered nurse staffing levels; and informing patients how to report potential violations of the law.

Rep. Larry Inman (R-Williamsburg) said it is time for a public policy conversation on staffing levels for nurses in the state.

"It's just plain wrong that when you go into the hospital, your nurse could have far too many patients to be safe," he said. "A nurse's workload can literally be a matter of life or death for you or your loved one. This is a case where the government needs to enact reasonable standards to protect all its citizens, and I'm glad to see bipartisan movement toward achieving that."

The poll commissioned by the group also showed 77 percent of voters agree that "the quality of patient care in MI hospitals is suffering because registered nurses are being assigned too many patients per shift." And 44 percent of households with an overnight hospital stay in the past two years believe the quality of care suffered due to nurses having too many patients at one time.

The statewide survey of 600 Michigan voters was commissioned by the Michigan Nurses Association and conducted by telephone (landlines and cell phones) September 8-14 and had a margin of error of plus or minus 4 percentage points, a statement said.

Anderson Robbins Research, a Boston firm, conducted the survey and was chosen because it has worked with both nursing and hospital organizations and Democratic and Republican clients, the group said.

Revenues Mostly Steady In September

State revenues were $30.8 million better than expected in September, but entirely because of a $42.6 million reimbursement the state received from the federal government in home heating credit refunds, a Senate Fiscal Agency report released Thursday showed.

Revenues to the School Aid Fund were $38.3 million more than forecast in May, while revenues to the General Fund were $8 million less than expected.

Through September, revenues to the General Fund are $25.9 million below the May Consensus Revenue Estimating Conference forecast and revenues to the School Aid Fund are $66.9 million below expectations.

September was the first month since January that sales tax revenues exceeded the year-over-year figure for the month from the previous year.

Net income tax revenues were up 11.6 percent from September 2014. Also up from the previous year was the sales tax (3.3 percent), the state education property tax (13 percent) and the Real Estate Transfer Tax (3.1 percent).

Declining from year-ago levels were the Corporate Income Tax (-14.7 percent), the insurance tax (-95.4 percent) and the oil and gas severance tax (-48.5 percent).

Committee Roundup

PROMISE ZONES: The maximum number of eligible entities that may be certified by the Department of Treasury to establish educational promise zones assisting in affording a postsecondary education would increase from 10 to 15 under legislation reported by the Senate Economic Development and International Investment Committee Thursday.

SB 539 and SB 540 would also require a promise zone development plan to include provisions regarding the assessment and reporting of student performance, as well as allow Treasury to adjust the calculation of captured State Education Tax revenue if the boundaries of a promise zone were changed by a merger or other circumstance.

The bill also requires the property and assets of a dissolved promise zone authority to be used solely for the purposes of promoting access to postsecondary education, but the committee adopted an S-2 substitute to SB 539 that includes "trigger language" regarding such dissolutions, one legislative aide told the committee. In it, a Promise Zone Development Plan must be submitted to Treasury within five years of a municipality deciding to have such a zone, and once that zone is granted by the state, the municipality must begin awarding scholarships within two years.

Language was also added to ensure Promise Zones include in their development plans how they'll track data on students.

The bills were unanimously reported to the full Senate for consideration.

Capital Notebook: Former President Clinton To Speak At MSU

Former President Bill Clinton is the first recipient of the Spartan Statesmanship Award for Distinguished Public Service and will be the keynote speaker at the Governor Jim Blanchard Public Service Forum on November 18 at Michigan State University.

Mr. Blanchard and his wife, Janet, donated $1 million for the program.

"The goal of this lecture series is to provide generations of students, faculty and people in the MSU community with the opportunity to hear and learn from national and international political leaders and others," Mr. Blanchard said in a statement. "(Mr. Clinton's) public service in politics, followed by his excellent work through the Clinton Foundation, is exactly the type of dedication and inspiring story we hoped to bring through the Blanchard Forum."

Mr. Blanchard was one of Mr. Clinton's most enthusiastic supporters when the then-Arkansas governor ran for president in 1992. After Mr. Clinton won, he named Mr. Blanchard the U.S. ambassador to Canada.

The Department of Political Science in MSU's College of Social Science administers the Blanchard Forum and statesmanship award.

The event will be held at the Kellogg Hotel and Conference Center and will serve as a fundraiser for the program, MSU said in a statement, with proceeds paying for student attendance at this event and future ones.

DEBANO DEPARTS RESTAURANTS ASSOCIATION: Brian DeBano, the president and CEO of the Michigan Restaurants Association, is leaving the organization after four years. A statement from the association said he was leaving to pursue future ventures but did not specify what those would be. Justin Winslow, the association's vice president of government affairs, will serve as interim president and CEO.

"Brian has left the MRA in great shape and for that we sincerely thank him," MRA Board of Directors Chairman Ken Miller said in a statement. "Under his leadership, the association is financially and operationally sound and our strong reputation remains intact. I have no doubt he will be successful in his future ventures."

TALBOT GETS FULL TERM AS CHIEF APPELLATE JUDGE: Court of Appeals Chief Judge Michael Talbot will keep the chief judge title through 2016, under a Supreme Court order released this week. The court named Mr. Talbot to the post in January to fill the remaining year of the term begun by then-Chief Judge William Murphy.

GROUP SUPPORTING ENERGY LEGISLATION STARTS COUNTDOWN CLOCK: Citizens for Michigan's Energy Future, a group that supports energy legislation backed by the chairs of the House and Senate energy committees, has started a "countdown clock" to mark when some coal-fired plants will be shuttered next year. The site also is designed to let visitors urge legislators to support SB 437 and SB 438 as well as HB 4297 and HB 4298.

"To account for growing capacity concerns, Michigan must responsibly replace the power we will lose due to these plant closures," said Kelly Rossman-McKinney, spokeswoman for Citizens for Michigan's Energy Future.

WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT AGENCY DIRECTOR LEAVING: Michigan Workforce Development Agency Director Christine Quinn is resigning from her position to become regional administrator of the U.S. Department of Labor, Employment and Training, the state's Talent Investment Agency announced Thursday.

She will be headquartered at the federal department's regional office in Chicago and assumes her new duties on November 30.

Ms. Quinn will manage a team that oversees a 10-state region including Michigan. The regional office ensures that employment and training programs at the state level reflect the political and socio-economic conditions that impact state and local economies.

"Michigan has been fortunate to have someone of Christine's caliber spearheading these critical workforce development initiatives," said TIA Director Stephanie Comai, in a statement. "She has a genuine passion for helping workers to succeed in this changing economy and for helping employers to meet their talent needs. On behalf of our entire agency, I wish her all the best."

Stephanie Beckhorn, who currently serves as director of programs for the Workforce Development Agency, was named acting director.

COLBECK, HERTEL TO DEBATE ROAD FUNDING: After issuing a challenge to his fellow legislators in either chamber to debate him on why a tax increase is necessary to help pay for the state's ailing infrastructure, Sen. Patrick Colbeck (R-Canton Township) has found acceptance to such an invitation from Sen. Curtis Hertel Jr. (D-East Lansing).

The debate is to take place on Tuesday, October 20, between 1:45 and 2:45 p.m., the location to be determined but for sure in Lansing, according to a statement from Mr. Colbeck's office.

Doors are to open at 1:30 p.m., Mr. Colbeck's office said.

Volume #54, Report #206 -- Friday, October 16, 2015

Newsmaker Friday: Price Says Third Grade Reading Took Over Her Heart

The process leading up to the vote on two separate bills related to education policy was "intense," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=285601&locid=1" }, who led the charge on legislation to get third-graders reading at grade level and another outlining educator evaluations in the state, told Gongwer News Service.

"I think maybe I can sleep now," Ms. Price said Friday. The House voted Thursday { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB482201" }, which would set up interventions for students struggling with reading in their early elementary grades and would also retain students if they are not reading proficiently at the end of third grade.

The bill was more controversial than { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB10301" }, outlining educator evaluations, and it took two long session days this week before the third-grade reading bill had enough votes to eventually pass the House 57-48.

"It was a heavy lift," Ms. Price said.

Though a similar bill did come up last term on reading proficiency, it never got enough traction for the full House to bring it up on the floor.

But this term, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } also made it a priority. A work group was put together with various lawmakers and stakeholders who met for three hours every Thursday during the summer, Ms. Price said.

"That process was very intense," Ms. Price said.

Ms. Price, during her floor speech on the bill Thursday, said she wouldn't consider herself "fire-y," but when talking with stakeholders on the third grade reading bill, she said it wasn't difficult for her to hold her ground on ideas she thought would harm the legislation.

"It's hard for me not to get fired up about this though," she said. "Every so often there is one piece of legislation that takes over your heart. For me it is this bill. I think it is likely because I love to read so much and I don't want any child to be deprived of that ability."

Ms. Price said her passion originated with hearing the statistics of how many students in the state were not reading proficiently before entering the fourth grade. Using the state assessment, it's 30 percent of kids, she said. But when looking at a more rigorous national assessment, it's almost 70 percent.

Ms. Price said she used to have conversations with former Rep. Joe Haveman about how the state could decrease its prison population, and both agreed it started at early childhood.

"If you start giving children a better education ... then they will have more options in life," she said.

The bill began as a bipartisan effort with Democrats involved in the work group and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=319301&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor), the minority vice chair on the Education Committee, and House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268401&locid=1" } (D-Auburn Hills) co-sponsors on the bill.

However, Democrats ended up offering a variety of amendments that were not adopted to the bill, and the bill passed with only three Democrats voting in support. Mr. Zemke and Mr. Greimel removed their names from the bill.

"I will just be honest," Ms. Price said of losing the Democratic support. "I was very disappointed."

Ms. Price said it is not a partisan issue, but there was a disagreement on how to get increased reading proficiency in the state.

"I don't think anyone disagrees our children's reading scores are too low," she said.

Ms. Price said the retention portion of the bill got too much attention. She said the intervention pieces in the bill are the key. But last term, instead of being in a single bill, the legislation was a package of two. One held the retention portion and the other held the interventions.

Ms. Price said she believes that led to a focus on the retention last term and this one.

"Truly, I do not want to retain any kids," she said.

On the Senate side, Ms. Price said she believes { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-St. Clair), chair of the Senate Education Committee, is on board with the bill. She said he was on the work group as well.

"I have every reason to believe it will pass in the Senate," she said.

Another bill that passed this week, SB 103, which outlines educator evaluations in the state, began dramatically but eventually passed with relative ease in the House.

"If you had asked me about that three months ago, I would have (been surprised)," Ms. Price said of the bill passing drama-free.

But Ms. Price said the committee worked hard with stakeholders to get a final product out of committee.

"We were pretty confident when it came out of the committee it would move forward easily," she said.

On what's next for the Education Committee, Ms. Price said Mr. Zemke and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=371701&locid=1" } (R-Holland), the vice chair of the committee, have been working in a group discussing teacher preparedness.

She also said a debate on how to move forward with Detroit Public Schools is also coming to the committee.

Mr. Snyder has advocated getting state funds help pay off DPS debt and developing a new district in the city.

Ms. Price said she understands where the governor is coming from with his proposal, but also knows her caucus will be hesitant because of the money involved.

She also said she wants something sustainable put in place.

"I am very concerned that whatever is put in place is sustainable and in 10 years we won't be right back here," she said. "That means for me financial stability and academic improvement."

Presumptive Parole Has Uphill Battle In Senate

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } was not shy earlier this week about the fact that his caucus has numerous concerns and questions about a bill allowing presumptive parole for inmates reaching their earliest release date, and responses from several members of that caucus on Friday only further illustrate the bill is in trouble in the chamber.

"I did not hear one person pushing this at all, and I think it's very telling this wasn't referred to Judiciary committee or the corrections budget (subcommittee) where it should be," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=83401&locid=1" } (R-Lawton) said of general caucus support or opposition to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB413801" } .

Indeed, when the House passed the bill earlier this month, Mr. Meekhof sent it to the Senate Government Operations Committee, which tends to serve either as a bill graveyard or a place where very controversial legislation that needs a longer period of time to review goes.

Of the prospects of this bill in particular, Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=18801&locid=1" } (R-White Lake Township) said it was likely the latter. Mr. Kowall said he does not himself have a position on the bill as it was sent over.

"Right now I'm listening to all sides," he said. "There's concerns, rightfully so, with prosecutors and sheriffs. It's a long way from being done."

Having run a small police department himself, Mr. Kowall said, he shares the concerns of some on whether those who would be paroled are still a danger to society and whether they were prior to being locked up.

"It's all the typical concerns over what type of parolees will be looked at to let out, the danger to society, (and) are we letting out people we're afraid of or people we're simply mad at," Mr. Kowall said. "It's all the same discussions that have been going on in the House and it's just going to take a while."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=102801&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph), chair of the Senate Appropriations Corrections Subcommittee, said all the conversations are exactly what need to be had for meaningful reform, though. He said his colleagues have been interested in whether HB 4138 would indeed show savings to the cost of corrections, how much, and whether it begins to change the way the department operates "for the benefit of the taxpayers and public safety."

"I have a lot of questions as to what the intent of the bill is and whether or not the intent matches the goals and objectives. If the intent is to save us money, I'm not sure this gets us to the kind of savings we want," he said. "If the intent is to provide the kind of services necessary to reintegrate offenders into Michigan society after they've served their time, I'm not sure this accomplishes that goal either."

Mr. Meekhof (R-West Olive) earlier this week pointed to Mr. Proos as being one of the lead legislators on the matter as the Senate considers the legislation and other types of Corrections reform. When asked about those alternatives, Mr. Proos listed numerous options, including:

- Continuing investment in law enforcement as the deterrent and as the public safety factor;
- Continuing investment in things like the Swift and Sure program, as well as the pilot program Parole Sanction Certainty (which follow the same model as Swift and Sure on the probation side to ensure parolees are receiving the kind of services they need to prevent them from becoming repeat offenders, he said); and
- A continued effort to ensure the cost structure in the Department of Corrections is "closely aligned with private sector costs so as to get the best taxpayer value possible," he said.

In fact, those issues are so central to this matter, Mr. Proos said, that he expects to have a hearing to discuss prisoner education, the positives and negatives of that expenditure, and whether it's meeting present-day job needs in various communities.

"After all, every three-to-four years, we parole the entire population of the Department of Corrections," he said. "If the folks are not prepared for parole, the question should be asked, why aren't they?"

He continued, "You have to peel away all the misinformation that exists on all sides of the issues and try to get to the root cause and the root problem. This isn't just a discussion about finances, it's not just a discussion about criminals, it has to be a more comprehensive and broad conversation about corrections, the judiciary and law enforcement and our entire criminal justice system."

Of the House plan, he said it calls into question "the most salient question about parole" in that some offenders are not as ready as others to go before the Parole Board before their earliest release date.

But Ms. Schuitmaker, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee who also served on the House committee during her time there, said the rate at which Michigan already paroles most of its prisoners is exactly why the legislation isn't necessary.

"We've done a lot in probation and swift and sure ... to try to rehabilitate people or hold them accountable to break the cycle of crime," she said. "I think the statistics don't bear it out and most people are let out within their first year of their earliest release date.

"I think also, we've had two reports from (Council of State Governments) come in and dispel the myth that we have all these people in prison that shouldn't be there," Ms. Schuitmaker said. "I think when you take a look at how we rank comparatively, we send fewer people initially to prison than surrounding states and that's why you see on the back-end that we keep more people. Michigan does a good job keeping people with substance abuse problems out of prison."

And the cost savings are "minimal" at best, she said.

As to the chance the bill might have in the Senate, especially in the immediate future, Mr. Proos said his hope is simply that the bill takes the time necessary for such a monumental change.

"We'll look at the positives and negatives of the House package and take that into account as it relates to comprehensive reform and criminal justice," he said. "I commend the House for working on a package that has opened the door to real conversations (about Corrections)."

EPA Creates Drinking Water Task Force For Flint

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency announced Friday it had developed a Flint Safe Drinking Water Task Force to provide technical assistance to the city and the Department of Environmental Quality as they work through the water issues in the city.

The task force will be led by Region 5 Deputy Regional Administrator Susan Hedman and will assist with developing and implementing a plan to secure water quality, including measures to optimize corrosion control, it said. Task force members will also be available for consultation purposes, as well as to coordinate, as necessary, with federal, state and local public health agencies to assist with protection of public health.

"EPA is committed to working with our state and local partners to ensure a safe and reliable drinking water supply for the residents of Flint, Michigan," Ms. Hedman said in a statement. "The formation of this task force continues our commitment to providing technical assistance to the city of Flint and the state of Michigan."

The task force is intended to provide technical guidance for both the coming switch back to the Detroit Water and Sewerage System and, once it is completed, to the new pipeline from Lake Huron by the Karegnondi Water Authority. The various officials and experts are intended to be available on-site in Flint.

Flint Mayor Dayne Walling said the switch back to Detroit water was expected to be completed by 5 p.m. Friday, earlier than expected.

The DEQ welcomed the additional assistance, spokesperson Brad Wurfel said. "We are glad to have the continued technical support and counsel from our federal partners," he said." We have been working closely with the U.S. EPA on the challenges in Flint, including its added presence on the city's technical advisory and the Governor's 10-point plan. This is welcome news and we anticipate it will help us implement the Governor's strategy."

Elected officials from the region also hailed the EPA's assistance.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=306801&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said he had requested the EPA send in advisors.

"I welcome the EPA's announcement today that they'll be sending technical advisors to Flint to assist the city and MDEQ on site with ensuring the safety of Flint's water," Mr. Kildee said in a statement. "The task force is a result of letters and phone calls over the past week with Administrator McCarthy and the EPA. In those communications, I repeatedly requested that the EPA send technical advisors to Flint to help with the transition of water sources. I am pleased to see that within a week the EPA has responded positively to my request, and I'm hopeful that this announcement is a step forward for the future of Flint's water."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=7801&locid=1" } (D-Bloomfield Township) also took some credit for the additional assistance being lent to Flint.

"All Michiganders deserve access to safe and clean drinking water, and the increased lead levels found in the Flint water system are simply unacceptable. I personally raised this issue with EPA Administrator McCarthy and have called on the EPA to provide the necessary resources and technical expertise to help ensure the water system is safe for drinking, cooking and bathing," Mr. Peters said in a statement. "All levels of government need to work together to prevent this type of situation from ever happening again, and the Flint Safe Drinking Water Task Force is a good first step."

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) was also pleased to hear the news.

"The EPA plays an important role in managing Flint's crisis recovery. We should work closely with them and consider whether they may be able to offer additional support," Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said. "I also hope the EPA will be able to help us determine what happened and provide us with a solid oversight framework going forward. It's crucial that we take steps to ensure this never happens again."

The Task Force will be comprised of scientists and technical experts from the EPA Region 5 office in Chicago, the National Risk Management Research Lab in Cincinnati and the EPA drinking water program. In addition, EPA will ask { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } to designate a DEQ official and the Mayor of Flint to designate a city official to serve as points of contact for the Task Force, the EPA said.

Bishop Shows Slight Lead Over Gilbert In Funds With All Reports In { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=17501&locid=1" } was able to outraise Democratic challenger Melissa Gilbert, but not by much, his quarterly campaign finance report showed.

Mr. Bishop (R-Rochester) raised $213,962 for the quarter compared to the $200,372 Ms. Gilbert raised (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542050104" }). But his $396,776 in cash gave him a substantial funding head start in the race. He has raised $529,352 total for the cycle. He also brought in $2,975 total for the cycle from other authorized funds.

He did, though, still have $31,872 in debt.

Paul Mitchell is leading the race to succeed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=3701&locid=1" } (R-Harrison Township), at least based on funding, reporting $328,025 raised in his first quarter in the race. He had $363,758 cash on hand but also had a $250,000 loan from himself as part of those funds.

Ms. Miller, as she wound down her campaign, still had $739,721 in cash, though she raised nothing for the quarter and only $7,675 for the cycle.

Democrat Paul Clements does have a way to go to catch { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=2401&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph) on fundraising. Mr. Upton reported collecting $235,000 for the quarter and $1.28 million so far for the cycle. He had $829,168 in cash.

Among his total funding, Mr. Upton had $67,493 for the quarter and $89,790 for the cycle from other authorized committees.

SUBSCRIBERS PLEASE NOTE: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=87801&locid=1" } (R-Tipton) slightly outraised challenger { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=318101&locid=1" } (D-Saline) for the quarter. In addition to the $133,160 his campaign raised in contributions for the quarter, his leadership fund, the Walberg Victory Fund, transferred $77,970 to his campaign committee. That fund provided him $93,844 in total for the cycle. Those receipts were included in his $922,034 in cash on hand reported Thursday.

Supreme Court Vacates Appellate Ruling On MCCA, FOIA

The Supreme Court in { HYPERLINK "http://cdn2.hubspot.net/hubfs/434504/150001_2015-10-16_or.pdf?t=1445014759186&utm_source=hs_email&utm_medium=email&utm_content=22923628" \t "blank" } has vacated a Court of Appeals ruling holding that the Michigan Catastrophic Claims Association is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act and remanded the case to the appellate court for further action.

Specifically, the Supreme Court vacated the conclusion of the Court of Appeals that the establishment of the MCCA did not violate Article IV, Section 25 of the Constitution, which requires the section or sections of any act altered or amended by a bill to be re-enacted and published at length.

The MCCA statute specifically exempts the records of the association from being public, but the Legislature did not also amend the FOIA to exempt MCCA records.

In its order regarding CPAN v. Michigan Catastrophic Claims Association (SC Docket No. 150001), the Supreme Court said the Court of Appeals on remand should rule on an issue it left untouched in its first ruling - whether the MCCA is a public body. If it is a public body, then it should again decide whether the statute creating it violated the Constitution's requirement that all statutes amended should be re-enacted and published.

If it is not a public body, then the entire issue is moot because then the MCCA would not fall under the jurisdiction of the FOIA.

The Coalition Protecting Auto No-Fault and others have urged the opening up of MCCA records. Insurers, which run the MCCA, have resisted the change.

The Supreme Court held arguments Tuesday on whether to grant leave to appeal (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542030104" }).

Major points of discussion during those arguments were the question of whether the MCCA is a public body and whether the Legislature erred in not amending the Freedom of Information Act.

Attorneys for the two sides vigorously disagreed on whether the MCCA is a public body with CPAN contending it is and the MCCA arguing it is not.

In a statement, CPAN general counsel George Sinas said he expected CPAN to prevail on the question of whether the MCCA is a public body.

"When the Michigan Legislature publicly creates such entities through its legislative power, the entity created should be considered a 'public body' and therefore be subject to FOIA," he said. "This allows that all interested citizens who impacted by that entity will have the ability to learn the truth about the way it operates."

Snyder Names Task Force To Draft Special Education Changes

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } announced Friday a new task force to turn the comments { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151301&locid=1" } collected over the summer on special education into new policy recommendations on special education.

Mr. Calley started his listening tour on special education at about the same time the Department of Education was seeing substantial backlash to a package of administrative rules changes that opponents said would give more power to school districts to limit or deny services.

Among the key recommendations Mr. Calley collected from his public meetings and online surveys was stronger language controlling how districts use restraint and seclusion to control behavior.

He had asked the State Board of Education, when he presented his findings to that body (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=541760103" }), for help developing a dispute resolution process.

Mr. Snyder is seeking quick work from the task force, asking for a final report before the end of the year.

"This group will help us remain focused on putting Michigan's special needs children and their families front-and-center when considering reforms to this vital component in our educational system," Mr. Snyder said.

In addition to Mr. Calley, who will chair the panel, the task force includes education board members Michelle Fecteau (D-Detroit) and Eileen Weiser (R-Ann Arbor).

Legislators on the panel include { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } (R-Saint Clair), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=41301&locid=1" } (D-Taylor), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=353601&locid=1" } (R-Clarkston) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=264501&locid=1" } (D-Allen Park).

Karen McPhee, Mr. Snyder's education adviser, as well as Walled Lake Schools elementary teacher Melody Arabo, who was Michigan Teacher of the Year for 2014-15 will also participate, as will Mary Bouwense, president of the Grand Rapids Education Association and a special education teacher; Elmer Cerano, executive director of Michigan Protection and Advocacy Service; Teri Chapman, director of the Department of Education Office of Special Education; Diane Heinzelman director of special education for Charlevoix-Emmet Intermediate School District and chair of the Michigan Autism Council; Laura Jones, founder of Special Education Advocacy and Development; Scott Koenigsknecht, superintendent of the Ingham Intermediate School District; and Marcie Lipsitt, founder of Michigan Alliance for Special Education.

Appeals Court Upholds Registry For New Non-Sex Convictions

The requirement, added in 2011, that those who have a prior criminal sexual conduct conviction who commit a new felony have to register as sex offenders is a recidivist law and so is constitutional, the Court of Appeals said in a case released Friday.

Anthony Tucker, who was required to register after pleading guilty to felonious assault and domestic violence charges, argued the law was unconstitutional because it added to the penalty of his prior offense. He had been released from probation for a 1990 assault with intent to commit criminal sexual conduct conviction before the registry took effect in October 1995.

Mr. Tucker argued the new provision requiring him to register was an ex post facto addition to that earlier charge.

The court, in a per curiam published decision signed by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=108801&locid=1" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=152701&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77401&locid=1" } (People v. Tucker, { HYPERLINK "http://publicdocs.courts.mi.gov:81/OPINIONS/FINAL/COA/20151015_C322151_31_322151.OPN.PDF" \t "blank" }), found the law met the standards for a recidivist statute.

"Defendant's registration was not required until he committed another felony in 2013," the court said. "His 1990 conviction was used to enhance the consequences of his 2013 felony, which was committed after the effective date of the statute."

To be considered ex post facto, the law would have had to require Mr. Tucker to register immediately on its effective date based on his prior conviction, the court said.

The court also rejected Mr. Tucker's argument that the prohibition on him being in school safety zones and the requirement that he register in person were cruel and unusual punishment. The court, citing a variety of prior cases, found the provisions were not punishment.

CONDOMINIUM OWNERS: Residents of a condominium are on their own land and so cannot sue for slip and fall injuries, the court said (Francescutti v. Fox Chase Condominium Association, { HYPERLINK "http://publicdocs.courts.mi.gov:81/OPINIONS/FINAL/COA/20151015_C323111_36_323111.OPN.PDF" \t "blank" }).

Michael Francescutti sued after such a fall, arguing the association was negligent for not keeping the snow and ice from the walks. The association countered that it was an open and obvious hazard.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=108901&locid=1" }, joined by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=220101&locid=1" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=152801&locid=1" }, said the association owed Mr. Francescutti no duty as a lessor because it was not. He, as a unit owner, was a co-owner of the common area where he fell.

"Defendant is not leasing the common areas to plaintiff under a lease and, therefore, it is not a 'lessor'," Mr. Sawyer said.

Nor, because he is a co-owner, is he an invitee or a licensee owed any duty of care by the association, Mr. Sawyer said.

FARM BUREAU ENDORSES WHITEFORD: The Michigan Farm Bureau AgriPAC has endorsed Rep. Mary Whiteford of Allegan in the 80th House District special election.

Ms. Whiteford is up against seven other Republicans in the special election primary for the seat, which was vacated when former Rep. Cindy Gamrat was expelled. Ms. Gamrat is also running for re-election.

The Farm Bureau also endorsed Ms. Whiteford in her 2014 bid.

Capital Notebook: Court Again Continues Hearing In State, HP Case

Kent Circuit Judge Christopher Yates continued the hearing held Friday on the state's request for a preliminary injunction ordering Hewlett Packard to turn over the source code for the Business Application Modernization project for the Department of State and assist the department with an orderly transition following the state's termination of HP's contract.

Department spokesperson Gisgie Davila Gendreau said the two sides have agreed on a transition plan and that HP agreed to provide the source code by Monday until the judge rules on the state's request.

The hearing will continue November 2.

TOURISM SOCIAL MEDIA WORKSHOP RFP: Travel Michigan has issued a request for proposals for a contractor to create a series of regional workshops and materials to educate Michigan's travel industry on utilizing social media to promote their destinations and better engage with Pure Michigan.

The RFP seeks a contractor to educate members of the state's tourism industry on the latest social media strategies, trends and best practices; organize and host a series of regional, in-person workshops and develop a Social Media Tourism Toolkit; create and maintain a social media Resource Library and provide industry members with a self-assessment workbook that will allow them to audit their social media efforts and presence.

Application questions will be due via email by 3 p.m. Eastern Time on October 22, 2015, a q-and-a posted to the Michigan Economic Development Corporation website on October 28 and electronic proposal submissions due by 3 p.m. on November 4, 2015.

Volume #54, Report #207 -- Monday, October 19, 2015

DPS, Debt Rising, At Risk Of Default Without State Action, Snyder Says

It will take $715 million from the state over 10 years to extract public education in Detroit from the debt the Detroit Public Schools has piled up, as well as putting together a new governance structure, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said Monday.

Mr. Snyder unveiled a slightly revised plan to overhaul K-12 public education in Detroit from the one he announced in April, and as was the case then, the proposal faces major challenges in clearing the Legislature. Mr. Snyder said he wants legislative approval by the end of the year to ensure the new structure is ready to launch with the start of the district's next fiscal year in July. He said he anticipated formal introduction of the legislation in about a week.

There were two big differences in the proposal: a voluntary instead of mandatory common enrollment system for both charter and traditional public schools in the city, and a bigger financial ask of the Legislature.

Pegged at $483 million in April, DPS debt is now at $515 million as a result of spending exceeding revenues. Mr. Snyder said the new Detroit district he would recommend to take over running DPS classrooms needs another $100 million for investments and working capital, and then another $100 million to cover operating losses once the district's 2016-17 fiscal year begins July 1, 2016, that are the result of declining enrollment and the need to find cost savings.

Under Mr. Snyder's plan, the district's $715 million in debt would stay with the old district and the 18-mill tax on all property other than principal residences in the district would go toward paying down the debt. The millage raises $70 million a year, so it would take 10 years to pay off the debt, Mr. Snyder said.

The catch is the 18 mills, like all school districts, goes to the state School Aid Fund, so the state would have to make up those funds.

Without state intervention, DPS could default on its debt as soon as February, Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel said. Mr. Snyder said the state would have to cover Detroit Public Schools' debt and retiree benefits should the district fall into bankruptcy, and that would cost all school districts much more than $715 million, describing that burden as "billions."

Mr. Snyder said he hoped the Legislature could come together to support the plan much as it did to bring the city of Detroit's government out of bankruptcy.

"Isn't this important to help the kids of Detroit? We're all Michiganders," he said. "Just like we did with the Grand Bargain, we recognized that there's benefit in helping one another when someone has issues. Look at the benefit to the city of Detroit today, how it's helping the whole state of Michigan by its comeback in terms of perception and business development."

The major components of the plan are the same as what Mr. Snyder proposed in April.

A Detroit Education Commission, appointed by the governor and Detroit mayor, would be established and in charge of hiring a chief education officer. That official would operate a common enrollment system encompassing DPS schools, charter schools and the Education Achievement Authority schools, but in the biggest change from the April plan, it would be voluntary to participate.

Charter schools had criticized the April plan's lumping them in with DPS.

The chief education officer would have the authority to close any school for low performance.

The current Detroit school board would remain with the old school district that only is in charge of paying down debt. A new school board would be created for the new district, jointly appointed by the governor and the mayor but eventually fully elected by Detroit voters by 2021.

In a new piece from the April plan, the city's Financial Review Commission, created as part of the Grand Bargain to bring the city out of bankruptcy, would oversee the district's finances until the debt is repaid. It would have a slightly different membership that does not include city government-specific appointees.

Despite the loss of $70 million a year for 10 years for the School Aid Fund, Mr. Snyder said projected growth in School Aid Fund revenues means that helping reconstruct public education in Detroit will not lead to cuts for other school districts' funding. He said he still anticipated increasing funding to all school districts.

"The amount of that could be somewhat less than it would be, but again, there will be no cuts," he said.

The final plan could look much different than what Mr. Snyder has outlined. He, and others, said bill drafting continues, and top Republicans said it would be a big lift. Additionally, Detroit Democrats raised concerns about returning control of the schools to an elected school board.

Detroit Public Schools has been run by a governor-appointed emergency manager since 2009, with its school board reduced to virtually no role.

Several Detroit Democrats, in a joint statement, said there were some positive aspects to the plan, but concerning pieces as well. They focused on the need for academic improvement and local control.

"The Detroit Caucus and I are committed to finding a solution to improve our Detroit Public Schools so that we can find solutions to improve Detroit's schools," said Rep. Brian Banks (D-Detroit), the Detroit Caucus chair. "The state has controlled DPS for many years, and it has been a failure. We have to find a better way, and we believe that way lies through local control. We look forward to working with all stakeholders to address all of the issues surrounding DPS."

LEGISLATIVE ACTION: The legislation is expected to start in the Senate. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=101501&locid=1" } (R-Hart), the chair of the Senate K-12, School Aid and Education Appropriations Subcommittee, said he will sponsor some components of the package.

Mr. Hansen said he did not want to discuss specifics in the plan because work continues to develop the legislation, even on the question of whether $715 million is the amount of money the state needs to address. As to Mr. Snyder's goal of passing the legislation before the end of the year, Mr. Hansen hesitated.

"We need to make sure it gets done right," he said. "I'm not going to set an artificial timetable."

But Mr. Hansen also said completing the legislation by the end of the year would be good "because of the complexity of it and the time it would need to get instituted."

Amber McCann, spokesperson for Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive), said the Senate Republican Caucus is eager to review the details of the plan. The $70 million a year for 10 years is "going to be quite a lift," Ms. McCann said.

"It's a big commitment. It's a long-term commitment," she said.

As to the end of the year timetable, Ms. McCann said it is ambitious, but not out of the question.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=179401&locid=1" } (R-Saginaw Township), the House Appropriations K-12 School Aid Subcommittee chair who called Mr. Snyder's April plan inadequate, sounded the same message Monday.

"I think this is just something that's going to require a little more imagination and a lot more boldness than this," he said. "I think the whole idea of replacing one command and control edifice for another isn't going to get the job done."

Gideon D'Assandro, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant), said Mr. Cotter's comments on the April plan still stand.

In those comments, Mr. Cotter called for "no raids" on the School Aid Fund. He said that fund exists to pay for education for all Michigan pupils, not to pay off the legacy debt of one district.

Until bills are introduced, it is not possible to say whether the Legislature could complete action on them this year, Mr. D'Assandro said.

As to how House Republicans would react to the $715 million figure, Mr. D'Assandro said, "I think everybody knew there was a big problem there and everybody knew it was going to be a pretty substantial fix that was needed."

TEPID REACTIONS: Like the first plan, reaction was tepid. The American Federation of Teachers-Michigan, which represents Detroit teachers, said the plan tends toward too much state control.

Charter school groups had a mixed reaction.

"Based on what we've seen, we have concerns with any plan that takes decisions out of the hands of parents and puts them in the hands of a single, politically appointed person," Dan Quisenberry, president of the Michigan Association of Public School Academies, said in a statement. "We need to raise student achievement in Detroit and solve DPS's financial situation, and from what we've seen and heard, this proposal does neither. We look forward to seeing the legislation that comes out of this, and having the charter school community continue being an active part of the discussion."

Jared Burkhart, executive director of the Michigan Council of Charter School Authorizers, said only that the organization was happy to see Mr. Snyder's interest in a system of "robust accountability" in Detroit and looked forward to working with the governor and legislators on the issue.

Mistakes In Flint Water Change Mean Leadership Change At DEQ

Department of Environmental Quality officials failed to follow proper treatment and testing protocols when Flint moved from the Detroit water system to drawing from the Flint River and took too long to fix the problem once they discovered their error.

Environmental Quality { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=303801&locid=1" } said his staff in the Office of Drinking Water and Municipal Assistance thought they were using the right protocols in testing Flint water, but he removed the head of that office in the wake of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } calling for an independent review of the state's actions in the situation.

But legislators from the region, and a water quality expert who has helped to test some of the Flint water, chastised state and federal regulators involved for trying only to preserve their own reputations when trouble with the water system began to emerge.

Mr. Wyant said DEQ staff made honest mistakes in how they handled the water source switch.

"It recently has become clear that our drinking water program staff made a mistake while working with the city of Flint. Simply stated, staff employed a federal protocol they believed was appropriate, and it was not," Mr. Wyant said in a statement announcing he had appointed Jim

Sygo as interim head of the drinking water office. "The water testing steps followed would have been correct for a city less than 50,000 people, but not for a city of nearly 100,000."

Liane Smith, the former head of the drinking water office, has been reassigned within the department.

"It's an issue of leadership going forward given that this is a very difficult issue, and it's an issue of experience with corrosion controls and a recognition that we needed stronger leadership in that role to address both of those," Mr. Wyant told Gongwer News Service.

"Jim has more leadership experience - and this issue is going to require leadership - and we will identify corrosion control expertise that we will bring to the table," he said.

Mr. Wyant said Ms. Smith would remain with the department and be given other duties "as assigned", but also that her long-term duties in the department could depend on the outcome of the third-party after-action review.

Mr. Sygo will lead the office temporarily, with a national search planned to find a new director.

Mr. Wyant said he would also be reviewing his own connections with his management staff.

"I do have to look at my own policies to be sure I've got a mechanism to identify these issues and flag them sooner," he said.

But he said the issue in Flint is being addressed now. "We feel we have an action plan in place that addresses lead exposure both the long term, intermediate and short term," he said.

Mr. Wyant said his staff apparently did not have the experience with corrosion control needed to know how to properly monitor the system, but he also put some of the fault on the federal standards.

"I'm coming to the conclusion there needs to be some changes to the federal rule to allow us to be more protective of public health," he said.

Marc Edwards, a professor at Virginia Tech and an expert in drinking water corrosion controls, said documents he obtained through the Freedom of Information Act showed state officials should have known the city had to implement corrosion controls and instead worked to cover up the issue.

He pointed out several emails from earlier this year where officials said a corrosion study on the system was warranted but should not be started because the city would again change its water source before the study is completed.

"I think it started innocently enough. ... It's possible that they didn't understand the federal rule," Mr. Edwards told Gongwer News Service. "By early 2015, this problem became too big to ignore. ... Even if they did not understand the rule, they should have taken much more aggressive steps to get this problem fixed."

To Mr. Wyant's offer to work with federal officials to improve the rule, Mr. Edwards said there is room for such improvement, but the current rule should have prevented the issues faced in Flint.

"The rule in fact did require them to have corrosion control," he said. "The rule does require them to take samples and, if they had done that correctly, people would have been told much sooner there was a problem."

Mr. Edwards said he had talked to Mr. Wyant on Monday and had agreed to Mr. Wyant's request for assistance.

"I will do whatever I can to make sure this doesn't happen again," he said.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said recent documents indicate state and federal officials were working more to back up their earlier findings than to ensure the water was safe.

"The latest developments in the Flint water crisis raise more troubling questions. It is clear from several now available documents that certain DEQ and EPA staff chose to put their reputations ahead of the safety and health of Flint citizens," Mr. Ananich said in a statement. "We do not know whether the misapplication of federal rules was intentional or due to negligence. That's why the Legislature needs to have a robust role in any investigation, and in ensuring those responsible for Flint's water crisis are held accountable."

Michigan Democratic Party Chair Brandon Dillon called for Mr. Wyant to be replaced.

"This was not an issue of experience and protocol. It is a question of competency and judgment. DEQ employees were not provided with the leadership and training necessary to do their jobs in this situation, and Mr. Wyant clearly lacks the judgment needed to do his," Mr. Dillon said in a statement. "You don't get to learn on the job when it comes to the well-being of Michigan's children and families. You may be able to fix the problem of Flint's drinking water going forward, but the damage done to the health of thousands of Flint's children is irreversible."

Spokespersons for Mr. Snyder could be reached, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.detroitnews.com/story/news/politics/2015/10/19/snyder-defends-environmental-quality-director-flint-crisis/74229710/" \t "blank" } that Mr. Snyder told its newspaper's editorial board that Mr. Wyant is doing a "great job" responding to the situation and that the initial focus is on the staff who personally handled the issue.

James Clift with the Michigan Environmental Council said his group has concerns over how much autonomy cities have in conducting the water testing. "Financially, the city has an incentive to not find a problem," he said, even though the protocols call for trying to test the likely worst homes.

Mr. Clift said cities also need to be required to let residents know that they could be at risk. "To the extent that people have these lead leads in their homes, do they know it," he said. The records of those connections should be computerized, he said.

HFA Report: Medicaid Will Need More GF To Meet Match

When the state has to contribute funds to finance the Healthy Michigan Medicaid Expansion program, it will need to use more General Funds, or find another source of revenues, a report by the House Fiscal Agency said.

But if the Healthy Michigan plan is discontinued, then the Legislature will also have to find more money from GF to cover annual savings Healthy Michigan provides the state now and to cover the loss of funds generate by the Health Insurance Claims Assessment as well as the use tax charged against Medicaid managed care organizations.

In addition, the HFA { HYPERLINK "http://www.house.mi.gov/hfa/PDF/CommunityHealth/Michigan_Medicaid_Program_Oct2015.pdf" \t "blank" } said, the Legislature will need to make some fixes to the act that created Healthy Michigan because "the current statutory formula doesn't work mathematically."

With the addition of Healthy Michigan, which covers about 600,000 people whose incomes are up to 133 percent of the federal poverty level, Medicaid provides health insurance to nearly 20 percent of the state's residents, the report said.

Approving Healthy Michigan was one of the most contentious issues of 2013, and in approving the program, the Legislature chose not to create a reserve program - that { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } had proposed - that could help the state cover the federal cut in funding beginning in the 2016-17 fiscal year.

In addition, the legislative approval created two conditions under which Healthy Michigan could be ended: if the federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid does not approve a new waiver the state has submitted by December 31 and if the costs of meeting the federal match exceed savings for the program.

Under the call for states to expand Medicaid enrollment to low-income individuals and families, in the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, the federal government promised to pay 100 percent of the cost of the additional coverage for the first three years. The federal match will then be set at 95 percent in calendar year 2017, and be phased down to 90 percent by 2021-22.

In terms of simple cash payments, the General Fund amount needed to meet the match will start at $137 million in 2016-17 to $356 million in 2020-21.

However, including the offset of the some $235 million in net savings, the state will not actually see an expenditure until the 2018-19 fiscal year, a total of $55 million, the House Fiscal Agency report said. By 2021-22, the expenditure would be an estimated $89 million.

That means the Legislature would have to pull more money out of the General Fund to cover the program, unless an alternate revenue source were found.

But there are other technical factors that could affect the overall savings and costs, especially in terms of when the Healthy Michigan costs exceed its savings (the report did not guess at a time when that might happen).

One of the most significant factors is how the level of state retainer savings will be set under the hospital provider assessment the state now charges. The current formula doesn't work mathematically, the HFA said, so the Legislature will need to change that in law, and when it does, it could set those savings at higher levels than currently forecast. The state also had not yet calculated the savings it is seeing by reducing the amount of uncompensated care it was paying for individuals who were uninsured, needed treatment and were unable to pay their expenses, the report said.

Veterans, Businesses Tout Support For Prevailing Wage

Two groups on Monday held separate press conferences opposing repeal of the prevailing wage, calling on legislators to support the policy because it's good for veterans and the state's small businesses.

"When I got out of the military, I looked at a lot of different jobs, but going into the trades is what suited me. Veterans will be hurt more than any other group (by a repeal)," said Jesse Stevens, a veteran of the U.S. Marine Corps and member of the Bricklayers and Allied Craftworkers.

Citizens Protecting Michigan Taxpayers, a group seeking to repeal the prevailing wage law, has submitted some 391,000 signatures in support of its efforts. It awaits a recommendation from the Bureau of Elections as to the validity of those petitions.

Presuming the Board of State Canvassers determines sufficient signatures of registered voters, then the Legislature has 40 days to pass the proposal, which would make a repeal law. Or it could take no action and let the proposal go to the November 2016 ballot. The former is widely expected, but backers of prevailing wage are trying to stop that scenario.

Dave Waymire, spokesperson for Michigan Prevails, a group in support of maintaining the prevailing wage law, estimated that of the 568,000 veterans in the state, about 10 percent were working construction and skilled trades.

Repealing prevailing wage could also hurt the sustainability of the skilled trades at a time when { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } is seeking to invest even more in those fields to fill the demand for such jobs, one veteran said.

"Our Local 252 (International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers) spends over $1 million a year to train apprentices," said Matthew Charles, an Army veteran who is currently a first-year electrician in an apprenticeship program. "I appreciate people saying, 'Thank you for your service,' but now we have politicians who say they want to thank me for my service by ending prevailing wage. This will cut opportunity, pay and benefits for construction workers who are veterans in Michigan, and that's not right."

Repealing the prevailing wage is also a slight to local businesses that have weathered the Michigan economic storms, said Jim Judd, owner of Master Craft Carpet Services in Plymouth.

"Michigan is coming back from a decades-long decline and this attempted repeal of the prevailing wage does nothing to help our comeback," he said in a press call separate from the veteran's event, both held on Monday. "(It) rewards out-of-state businesses that often don't provide jobs for our friends, family and neighbors."

Another business owner, Donna Pardonnet from Architectural Contractors Trade Association, said she has had first-hand experience that tells her Michigan contractors would face "unfair" competition from out-of-state corporations "that avoid paying taxes by paying workers under the table."

"They will be forced to compete with operations that promote unsafe worksites and with operations that replace skilled Michigan tradespeople with unskilled workers from out of state," she said.

Mr. Judd and Ms. Pardonnet are among { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/public/PW-businesses.pdf" } who signed and sent a { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/public/PW-letter.docx" } to the Legislature urging lawmakers to protect Michigan's prevailing wage laws.

Both groups argued that an earlier suspension of the law in the 1990s did not lead to cost savings, as fewer contractors bid on public projects.

But Chris Fisher, president of Associated Builders and Contractors of Michigan, said prevailing wage is "decidedly anti-taxpayer."

"Most credible studies prove that prevailing wage kills jobs and wastes tax dollars because it isn't hard to figure out that when you let unions rig the bidding process, prices will go up," he said. "Michigan's one of just six states where prevailing wage is based exclusively on union agreements. It's time to put taxpayers in charge instead of giving big labor a blank check with our tax dollars."

Hospital Report Says Improved Practices Netted Savings, Improved Lives

A report by the Michigan Health and Hospital Association said Monday that ongoing improvements in overall patient care has both saved money and improved overall outcomes for patients, including saving lives.

Significantly, the improvements include a 34 percent cut in deaths from septic shock from 2011 to 2014, the report said.

And in 2014 alone, hospitals saved more than $100 million in overall costs by reducing the number of readmissions by more than 10,000 cases.

The report said from 2010 to 2014, hospitals were able to reduce early elective births by 60 percent, which meant healthier mothers and babies. Approximately 2,900 births were affected.

And from 2012 to 2014, state hospitals were able to cut the use of catheters by 27 percent, which reduced the risk of overall infection.

Campaign Notes

PAC TAUNTS COURSER, GAMRAT WITH BUMPER STICKERS: The Progress Michigan Action Fund is selling bumper stickers in the 80th and 82nd House Districts where special elections are taking place to replace expelled former Rep. Cindy Gamrat and resigned former Rep. Todd Courser. In Ms. Gamrat's district, the bumper sticker says, "Todd's Girlfriend, Republican for State Representative," and in Mr. Courser's district, the bumper sticker says, "Cindy's Boyfriend, Republican for State Representative."

SBAM ENDORSES WHITEFORD; SPLITS ON 82ND DISTRICT: The Small Business Association of Michigan's political action committee has endorsed Republican Mary Whiteford of Casco Township in the special election in the 80th House District where former Rep. Cindy Gamrat was expelled. In the 2014 primary, Ms. Whiteford received the PAC's seal of approval.

In the 82nd District, where former Rep. Todd Courser resigned, the group said it had given stamps of approval to both Republican Jan Peabody of Lapeer and Republican Gary Howell of Lapeer.

GILBERT DONATIONS: Republicans used recent campaign finance filings to again hit Melissa Gilbert, candidate for the 8th U.S. House District as well as former television star, with her tax problems.

Ms. Gilbert has said in prior statements that she is working with the Internal Revenue Service and California tax officials to repay tax debts, but Michigan Republican Party Chairman Ronna Romney McDaniel said she should use at least one of her campaign contributions toward that end: the $5,400 she received from actor husband Timothy Busfield.

Volume #54, Report #208 -- Tuesday, October 20, 2015

Cotter, Meekhof Now Tangling On Roads

Efforts to find a way to generate $1.2 billion more for the state's roads further devolved Tuesday when Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof and House Speaker Kevin Cotter disagreed, publicly and privately, about the next step to take to break the stalemate on the issue.

Governor Rick Snyder, Mr. Cotter (R-Mount Pleasant) and Mr. Meekhof (R-West Olive) met in Mr. Meekhof's office for a little less than an hour Tuesday with staff, other legislators and Lt. Governor Brian Calley. The meeting began about a half-hour after Mr. Meekhof took the unusual step of publicly calling for the House to convene conference committees and put before the House the "deal" for a vote.

That "deal" is the 400-400-400 plan that relies upon $400 million in new revenue from raising the gasoline tax by 6.5 cents per gallon, $400 million from fees, largely through ending the depreciation in new vehicle registration fees and $400 million from the General Fund.

"There's other bells and whistles, but that's the base plan," Mr. Meekhof told reporters after session. "The drafts are completed, so no other work needs to be done. I have the drafts ready. A conference committee could meet. And I'm asking them to call the conference committee, put the last best deal we had on the table up for a vote, and go get the votes."

Mr. Cotter, exiting the leadership meeting later, asked if he could comment on the situation, simply said, "No."

Cotter spokesperson Gideon D'Assandro later dismissed Mr. Meekhof's request.

"Senate Majority Leader Meekhof abruptly left the last quadrant meeting early because Rep. Greimel changed his mind on an income tax cut, so he should know there is no deal," he said. "Speaker Cotter has been working with the governor on the issue since then, and he remains hopeful we can find reliable support for a permanent road funding solution."

Adding to the acrimony, later in the day, WOOD-TV, the NBC affiliate in Grand Rapids, aired a story in which House Minority Leader Tim Greimel (D-Auburn Hills) went further on the manner in which Mr. Meekhof allegedly left the last Legislative Quadrant meeting with the governor.

"I want to continue talking with the other quadrant leaders. I made that very clear last week when Arlan rushed out of the room like a child when he couldn't get his way," Mr. Greimel told WOOD-TV.

Meekhof spokesperson Amber McCann said Mr. Meekhof would not comment "on the actions of his colleagues" in quadrant meetings, saying those meetings are for frank conversations.

As to Mr. Cotter's rejection of Mr. Meekhof's request, she said, "I would find it surprising that the speaker and ... Representative Greimel aren't interested in moving the process forward."

Legislative sources, speaking on condition they not be named, said Mr. Cotter now plans to try to see if the House, using mainly Republican votes, can pass a new plan and essentially dare the Senate and Mr. Snyder to say no. Several sources said, at least initially, Mr. Cotter is considering another try at the 600-600 plan ($600 million in new revenue and $600 million dedicated from the General Fund).

The House took a stab at a 600-600 plan in August, but it faltered because House Republicans were short of the votes in their caucus, and Mr. Snyder declared $600 million from the General Fund was too much without addressing other pressures on it, such as the coming sunset of the Health Insurance Claims Tax, a key source of Medicaid funding.

A week ago, Mr. Snyder and Mr. Cotter declared an "impasse" in negotiations for a bipartisan deal for road funding. The main problem was that Mr. Greimel resisted the size of the income tax cut Republicans were seeking.

The quadrant has not met since that meeting.

"The House has this in their lap and they have the ability to act, and I'm asking them to act," Mr. Meekhof said. "I think to say it this way, the plan we put forward guarantees the road funding and gambles on the fact we'd have revenue for tax relief."

And Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) seemed to agree.

"There's a point in time where we do have to have some action," Mr. Ananich said. "I get the point he's talking about ... the House has kind of Charlie Brown-ed us a number of times on these roads deals."

Mr. Ananich said he has some concerns about the proposal by his Senate Republican colleagues because it does not account for a potential downturn in the economy.

"It's similar to Proposal A in that it only ever goes down, it doesn't go up. If there's a bad year or a series of bad years, that cut would compound the problem, and we've seen it's difficult to raise taxes," Mr. Ananich said. "So I'm hopeful we can have a conversation and figure out a plan that meets the need of tax relief but at the same time doesn't put the budget in a long-term sustainability issue."

Mr. Snyder, leaving the leadership meeting, said he appreciates where Mr. Meekhof is coming from with a call for the House to vote, but did not make the same request.

"There's an issue for the House and the Senate to have dialogue and discussion because it's a conference committee issue, but ... that last plan was a pretty reasonable compromise," he said.

Business Leaders for Michigan and the Michigan Municipal League issued a joint statement supporting Mr. Meekhof's call for the House to bring the 400-400-400 plan to a vote and also warning against any plan using more than $400 million from the General Fund for roads, saying it would jeopardize other key services.

Teacher, Administrator Evaluations Head To Snyder

Only two senators opposed supporting a revamped proposal that provides a framework for educator evaluations on Tuesday, sending the bill that had just been passed by the House last week to Governor Rick Snyder for his approval.

Sen. Rebekah Warren (D-Ann Arbor) and Sen. Coleman Young II (D-Detroit) voted in opposition to SB 103, and Sen. Mike Green (R-Mayville) was absent from session.

The bill has seen something of a wild ride in the Legislature, as it first passed the Senate back in May, but with much more dissent (See Gongwer Michigan Report, May 20, 2015). Among those who had first opposed to the bill's passage was Sen. Margaret O'Brien (R-Portage) who, when she served in the state House last term, worked alongside Rep. Adam Zemke (D-Ann Arbor) to craft a bill.

Ms. O'Brien supported the bill that passed the Senate 35-2 on Tuesday, saying she felt many stakeholders had been included in the process and were actually heard this time.

"It's focused on good, sound, education policy," Ms. O'Brien said of the final version Tuesday.

The House began taking up SB 103 in June, but before long it became clear there was too much distance between what the House Education Committee chair, Rep. Amanda Price (R-Park Township), envisioned for the bill and what Sen. Phil Pavlov (R-St. Clair), chair of the Senate Education Committee, had in mind. Making matters worse is that an adviser for Governor Rick Snyder in June told the House committee that Mr. Snyder did not support the bill in its current form (See Gongwer Michigan Report, June 18, 2015).

"I think the districts started realizing that if we don't make this happen now, they'll be under current law, and current law just wasn't going to be acceptable," Mr. Pavlov told reporters of what finally broke the log-jam on the matter. "So we wanted to make sure going into this school year that teachers, administrators and boards knew there was going to be a new policy in evaluating teachers that was better than current law, and I think that's what really started moving the discussion."

The bill heading to Mr. Snyder now establishes both training requirements and options for school districts and public school academies to develop their own teacher evaluation tool or make modifications to an existing tool. It also the funding for training must come from the Educator Evaluation Reserve Fund.

The Department of Education would also have to establish and maintain a list of teacher and administrator evaluation tools, and the list would have to, at the very least, include the tools recommended by the Michigan Council on Educator Effectiveness in 2013. Districts do not have to use the same tool for teachers and administrators.

For teachers, beginning in the 2018-19 school year, 40 percent of the year-end evaluation would be based on student growth, with half coming from the state assessment and half coming from a local assessment.

For administrators, beginning immediately, 25 percent of the annual evaluation would be based on student growth and assessment data. The data is an aggregate of student growth data used in teacher evaluations in the district where the administrator works.

Sen. David Knezek (D-Dearborn Heights) praised the bill on Tuesday as providing "clearly defined evaluation expectations to help create a system of effective teacher evaluation accountability," as well as allows for more local decision-making.

"This bill as amended will help us hold our educators accountable and ensure our students are receiving a quality education in the state of Michigan," Mr. Knezek said.

SB 103 also provides $14.8 million for districts to train administrators and teachers on the use of new evaluation tools.

The bill was well-received by various education interests, especially those had been pushing for such reforms since the first report from the Michigan Council on Educator Effectiveness years ago.

"Although the legislation passed by the House and Senate does not contain all of the council's recommendations, it does change the focus of evaluations," Michigan Education Association President Steven Cook said in a statement. "Instead of punishment, the goal of evaluations is now aimed at improving classroom instruction. In creating the Ball Commission and using its report as a guide, the Legislature acknowledged that experts in the field are invaluable in guiding education reform forward. That too is a change for the better."

Others were pleased to see the bill's final passage but looked to the Department of Education for leadership going forward.

"Michigan has not invested in nor developed new systems to better train and support Michigan's existing teachers. "We've done even less for school leaders," said Amber Arellano, executive director of The Education Trust-Midwest, in a statement. "Now the Department of Education can change that. It will need to play an unprecedented leadership role in systems change, oversight and ensuring the new system is providing sophisticated feedback to teachers, improving instruction across all districts and dramatically raising student achievement. Combined with the state's new college- and career-ready standards for teaching and learning, this is a huge opportunity for Michigan students."

The Tri-County Alliance for Public Education, which includes superintendents from Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties, also applauded the vote by the Senate.

"Effective teachers and administrators can make all the difference in the world when it comes to educating our kids, and constructive evaluation will strengthen teaching in our classrooms," said Russel Pickell, superintendent of Riverview Community Schools.

"We commend Senator Pavlov and the Michigan Legislature for working in good faith with educators on this legislation," said Mark Burton, executive director of the Alliance. "His leadership on this issue should be held up as an example of how legislators can learn from those on the frontlines of education to achieve our common goals and ensure our kids are prepared for college and a career."

And officials with the Michigan Association of Secondary School Principals said passing the bill in its H-8 form was "an important milestone" for the state's principals, but more work still needs to be done.

"Educators finally have a clear target: implementing improvement-focused evaluations and growing the quality of all educators. Today's vote validates the work of the schools that have already begun the hard job of implementing quality evaluation systems and will support those districts that still need to make the transition," the group said in a statement. "Regardless, there is still plenty of difficult work ahead to implement this new law, improve our collective performance and ensure that every student benefits from the expertise of skillful educators. The Department of Education also has a significant role to play moving forward in providing guidance for schools and allocating the funding appropriated to support these systems."

Ananich: 'Troubling' Finds On Flint Water Crisis

Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich said Tuesday it is "really troubling" that individuals within the Drinking Water Division of the Department of Environmental Quality spent more time protecting their reputation than they did protecting citizens, but he wouldn't go so far as to call for DEQ Director Dan Wyant to resign or be fired.

"I think we need to have a thorough investigation before we make any decisions about who should be fired or anything like that. I think it's clear he sees the gravity of the problem in his department, and I think he's learning that every day," Mr. Ananich told reporters after session. "But we have to get the bottom of how folks in the Drinking Water Division could so blatantly do everything they can in their power to hide the truth from the public, and that's pretty clearly what they did. "

The Flint Journal recently reported that emails exchanged among several DEQ and U.S. Environmental Protection Agency officials show flags had been raised about lead possibly leaching into Flint's water system some seven months ago.

Mr. Ananich said he's had some preliminary conversations with Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive) about next steps the Legislature could take to ensure accountability and help the citizens of his hometown regain trust in their water, their elected officials and their government. But Mr. Ananich said the two need to have more formal discussion about a course of action.

Mr. Ananich said he was also in the process of sending a request to the state's auditor general, who happens to be auditing the drinking water division, to add a few questions about the process and procedures in place in the event that a situation like has happened in Flint were to break out.

"When you get an email from somebody on your personal account, four or five people, and none of them have the self-respect for my community to say, 'hmm, maybe I shouldn't do this, maybe I should take this to the next level,' that's a problem," Mr. Ananich said. "That's a cultural problem that people would be more concerned about hiding something than telling the public the truth, and it's really troubling."

He said he felt there ought to be an investigation, though he wasn't immediately sure the form that could take. He hoped it would be independent, he said, and that "if things come out that people were negligent or purposeful in their actions, I think there needs to be some very serious consequences."

He also suggested a possible avenue is through the recently-created Senate Oversight Committee, especially because the House has a committee of the same name too.

"But I think with a department that's got such a heavy responsibility and one division in particular has shown that for the last 18 months they've failed, that warrants our involvement," Mr. Ananich said. "We have to get to the bottom of it. Every day more and more information comes out and it just gets worse."

Pavlov Taking Time On DPS Plan, Third Grade Reading Bill

Sen. Phil Pavlov may have cleared one major hurdle on Tuesday when the Senate passed a bill outlining a framework for the evaluation of teachers and administrators, but more work is still in front of him when it comes to potentially leading in the Senate on Governor Rick Snyder's recently announced plan for Detroit Public Schools, as well as a bill on third-grade reading proficiency that passed the House last week.

Mr. Pavlov (R-St. Clair), chair of the Senate Education Committee, said he is reviewing the proposal by Governor Rick Snyder on how to revamp Detroit Public Schools and pay down its debts without harming education for the students enrolled in the district (See Gongwer Michigan Report, October 19, 2015).

"We've been meeting with the leaders and the coalition over the last several months. I think it's got a long way to go, but I think again, there's a need there," he told reporters after session. "There's a crisis looming. So we'll work through that just like we have with any other issue."

Mr. Pavlov said one of his preliminary concerns about the plan is school of choice, and the ability of parents and students to have "unfettered choice to educational opportunities" without be penalized, he said.

But he's also concerned about the amount of funding that Mr. Snyder is requesting for the Legislature, "because you're taking that from all other students in the state of Michigan," Mr. Pavlov said.

Although some believe the plan could start over in the Senate, Mr. Pavlov said he was not immediately sure himself, but the Senate GOP caucus has a great deal of interest in the proposal.

As to whether he could personally support something like what Mr. Snyder is asking, especially given how much money and effort has already been given to Detroit, Mr. Pavlov said, "I'm not convinced anybody is willing to go and reward bad behavior, but we do have a problem and that is that these kids need to be educated. So there's got to be a balance there."

He said he thought it to be "a big ask" to try to get the deal on DPS done by the end of the year, seeming a little more open to a timeframe that is before the beginning of the next school year.

"I think some of these issues are going to work themselves out over time, and to put a timeframe and predict when that would happen is going to be very difficult from where we are today," Mr. Pavlov said.

READING PROFICIENCY: Mr. Pavlov's committee was also assigned the task Tuesday of reviewing HB 4822, a bill designed to get elementary students reading proficiently before entering fourth grade. The bill cleared the House last week with only three Democratic lawmakers in support - although it had cleared committee with support from the Democrats (See Gongwer Michigan Report, October 15, 2015).

Mr. Pavlov said he has no specific timeframe on the bill, admitting he hadn't really followed the issue very closely in the House until this point.

"I think we've clearly identified there's a problem here in this state. There's a number of issues I'm concerned about," he said. "We've made the largest investment in the country on early childhood education. We're asking the questions - when are those results going to start showing up? Why are kids still getting into third grade with all this additional support and still not having the highest proficiencies in reading. We're not just looking at third grade reading, we need to look at the Great Start program all the way through third grade."

'Kevin's Law' Update Clears House

Family and friends would be permitted to get mental health treatment for a person close to them before an unfortunate incident under legislation passed by the House Tuesday.

In 2004, former Governor Jennifer Granholm signed "Kevin's Law" in honor of Kevin Heisinger, who was beaten to death in a Kalamazoo bus/train station by a man with schizophrenia who stopped taking his medication.

Current law allows judges to order involuntary assisted outpatient treatment, but only after a major incident occurs.

Under HB 4674, which passed 103-2, sponsored by Rep. Tom Leonard III (R-DeWitt Township), a family member or friend would be allowed to petition the court and allow judges to order outpatient treatment for those who have had their mental illness confirmed by a physician, all without a crime being committed.

"This reform is sorely needed because current law makes it very difficult for people who might not recognize the severity of their situation to obtain the treatment they need," Mr. Leonard said in a statement. "In the same vein, we must guarantee individuals' due process rights are protected by providing legal counsel to guide them through the court process if they believe AOT is not necessary. This protects both the public safety and the privileges of the individual."

Supporters have said under current law (passed about a decade ago), a crisis needed to occur before intervention could happen, and communities have been confused by the complexity of "Kevin's Law" and it hasn't been used much.

"We must make public safety - including the well-being of the individual in need of care - a priority in this type of situation, but also ensure that their rights remain protected. This legislation strikes that delicate balance." Mr. Leonard said. "I want to thank Lt. Gov. Calley for bringing this issue to my attention, and for the strong leadership he has shown working to protect our state's most vulnerable citizens."

HB 4674 does the following:

- Offers early intervention, since current law requires a serious incident that might endanger public safety to occur before AOT may be requested;
- Simplifies the process of seeking court-appointed treatment; and
- Allows a judge to order AOT before an incident has occurred that could cause injury to the prospective patient or a member of the public.

Hertel, Colbeck Debate On Roads Drifts Into Other Issues

A debate between two sitting senators that was supposed to be on the fundamental question over whether a tax increase is a necessary component of a final road funding solution went a bit off topic Tuesday as other issues such as the cost of health care, maintaining prevailing wage and fewer taxes on the middle class found their way into the hour-long back-and-forth.

Sen. Patrick Colbeck (R-Canton Township) was pleased last week when Sen. Curtis Hertel Jr. (D-East Lansing) took him up on a challenge Mr. Colbeck had earlier raised to his colleagues about having a public debate on the necessity of a tax increase as a component for a road funding solution. But what began as a fairly civil disagreement on whether the objective was to raise $1.2 billion or to fix the roads in a manner that made them more sustainable eventually turned into a debate about the philosophical differences between Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. Colbeck began the discussion, saying he hoped to obtain an agreement that he and Mr. Hertel were trying to solve the same problem - a search that would come back perhaps in a manner he hadn't expected to, which is, not at all. Mr. Colbeck said beyond that key point, he wanted to debate his proposal, which in brief was to reprioritize existing funds, reduce expenses on fixing roads, leverage existing resources, and, if none of those were amicable, talk a tax increase.

Mr. Hertel took his opening statement in a completely different direction, saying that while he agreed funding Michigan's roads is the single-most important issue facing the state today, "I think people are frustrated because under this governor and this Legislature, they're paying more in taxes and they're not getting much out of it," he said. "I think people are frustrated with the massive tax cuts that have gone to corporations and have not gone to helping people in their everyday lives."

And he called Mr. Colbeck's proposal "a math problem" that focused more on logistics than it did on creating a long-term, sustainable funding solution for the state's roads and bridges.

"You believe the objective is to find $1.2 billion. I believe the objective is to find a way to fix roads faster than they degrade," Mr. Colbeck shot back.

Mr. Hertel returned, "$1.2 billion is the number the experts have come up with, not me. That's to maintain our current road system. I think we should invest more money into research and development to build longer lasting roads, but that's not been talked about in the Legislature."

The disagreement on the $1.2 billion number would continue, as Mr. Colbeck argued the problem could be smaller at about $700 million if the state would invest more into roads materials that were more sustainable, such as those being developed at the University of Michigan. Mr. Colbeck would raise other examples, but Mr. Hertel said his research into such materials and their companies is that they hadn't been tested in a practical manner, such as serving as a highway instead of a driveway, yet.

"I believe it's fiscally irresponsible," Mr. Hertel said of Mr. Colbeck's proposal, which, after some time, had finally revealed itself to involve a look at, and use of, restricted funds (which Mr. Hertel said was unconstitutional), as well as possibly using money associated with the Michigan Strategic Fund and the Budget Stabilization Fund.

Mr. Colbeck said fixing the roads ought to be considered economic development, and so the use of MSF funds would be warranted. And there is an excess of money in the BSF, so at least some of that could be directed toward roads, he said.

But Mr. Hertel ripped both as one-time solutions (though Mr. Colbeck later argued that funds from the BSF could be made into ongoing funds). He also pointed to some of the details in Mr. Colbeck's proposal, which Mr. Hertel alleged included taking money away from sexual assault prevention funds for university campuses and newborn screenings.

"I just don't understand. You can't play a legislative shell game. People pay these fees because they expect a service," Mr. Hertel said of Mr. Colbeck's proposal.

"All I'm saying is let's look into and make sure the actual funds are meeting the needs," Mr. Colbeck shot back.

Before long, the debate slid into an argument over whether to keep the state's prevailing wage and what the cost of the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act has to the state, though it would eventually return to point when questions from the audience were asked, the first of which questioned whether the Department of Transportation ought to be investing more into research and development projects on roads.

"They have (the) equivalent of sand box. The problem is, we never seem to convert those projects, those sandbox items into changes of how we fix those roads. I think we need to do a better job," Mr. Colbeck said of MDOT. "We're not getting the bang for our buck we deserve."

Mr. Hertel defended MDOT, saying like other parts of the state budget, theirs has been cut "to the bone."

"I'm all for doing more for less but you can't expect that to routinely work forever," Mr. Hertel said. "If you had a plan that was sustainable, don't you think Rick Snyder would jump on it?"

Both had different takeaways from the defeat of Proposal 1, but both also had concerns about an income tax rollback.

"I'm always for a tax rollback, but I'm cautioned by the fact that one of the first things we did when I came into the Legislature was to stop a rollback," Mr. Colbeck said. "I'm not convinced it would go all the way down, because people are still fixated on raising taxes."

"It's fiscally irresponsible," Mr. Hertel said of the rollback. "It scares me to roll it down in good times but have no time to go up in bad."

Bills Would Increase Motorcycle Safety Course Fee

The maximum fee for a motorcycle safety course would increase from $25 to $50 under legislation discussed in the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee on Tuesday.

HB 4853 and HB 4854, introduced by Rep. Jim Tedder (R-Clarkston), would increase the fee and require the Department of State to waive the written knowledge test, road signal test and driving skills test for an applicant who had successfully passed a private or public motorcycle safety course.

Under the first bill, government agencies offering the motorcycle safety courses would be allowed to charge up to $50, but could charge less if they chose.

Mr. Tedder said the fee not been increased since 1982. He said $25 does not come close to covering the cost of the class. He also said the fee is so low, some sign up for the class but then do not show up.

Under the current program, the public entities providing the classes submit a grant request to the department for reimbursement. Mr. Tedder said because the fee is low and the Motorcycle Safety Fund has shrunk, they are not always reimbursed for the full amount spent.

"Several institutions have voiced concerns over their ability to maintain hosting the class because they are quite frankly losing money," Mr. Tedder said. "This is an opportunity to make these whole so they can continue hosting these classes."

Mr. Tedder said he took one of the courses a couple months ago, and took a class from 8 a.m. until 6 p.m.

He said at the class booklets were provided, and six hours were spent out on the course and a motorcycle was provided during the class at no additional costs.

"For $25 I received nearly nine hours of quality instruction and at the end of that experience successfully completed a secretary of state approved test," he said.

Rep. Jeff Farrington (R-Utica) questioned why the increase was so large. "I am thrown back a little bit by a 100 percent increase in fees," he said.

Mr. Tedder said the fees were artificially maintained at a low level.

And Rep. David Rutledge (D-Ypsilanti) said he thought the fee should be $100. "The fee has been $25 for 30 years," he said.

American Bikers Aiming Toward Education also supports the legislation. The committee did not act on the bills.

MDOT PRESENTATION: Department of Transportation Director Kirk Steudle also spoke to the committee Tuesday on various efficiencies within the department and projects it's working on this year.

Mr. Steudle said the department has reduced staff by 15 percent during the last three years and combined with other efficiencies has saved $316 million during that time.

In 2015, he said, the department has saved $13.5 million by partnering with private entities to provide more street lights in Detroit, and saved $22 million through bond refinancing.

Mr. Steudle said during the next five years, the department will invest $503 million annually to repair and rebuild roads.

He said $168 million will be invested annually to repair bridges.

The committee ran out of time and Mr. Steudle was only able to take a couple questions from committee members but will return at the request of Rep. Peter Pettalia (R-Presque Isle), the committee chair.

Senate Panel Approves Ban On Marketing To Students

Companies that provide electronic services to schools would be prohibited from targeted marketing to students under legislation reported Tuesday from the Senate Education Committee.

The bill (SB 510), as reported, would ban advertising to students based on information the company collected on them as well as prohibit sale of any of that information.

The student or his or her parents would be permitted to request disclosure of any of the collected data, but the company would also be required to delete any or all of that data if the school district requests that.

The bill was reported unanimously with an S-2 substitute.

SHARED TIME: The committee also began discussions on bills (HB 4594 and HB 4790) that would allow kindergarten students to be eligible for shared time.

Current law allows students in first grade and above who are home schooled or attend a private school to take some classes at their local public school, with the school being reimbursed based on the amount of time the student spends at the public school.

Rep. Ed McBroom (R-Vulcan), sponsor of the bill, said the current law was written when kindergarten was generally part-time and so did not lend itself to shared time programs.

"Half-day kindergarten is pretty much not the rule anymore," he said. "This allows both home schoolers and private schools to work together with the public schools."

Mr. McBroom said there would need to be conflict substitutes approved when the committee moves the bills, which appeared to have general support from Republicans, to accommodate recent School Aid Act changes.

Snyder Signs Civil Asset Forfeiture Bills

Legislation putting new limits on civil asset forfeiture, one of the few major issues in recent years that largely united both conservative and liberal legislators, was signed into law Tuesday by Governor Rick Snyder.

The package of bills sets new reporting requirements for governments and police agencies on property seized, as well as setting new stricter standards governments must follow before seizing property.

"These new reporting requirements will raise the bar so that a fair balance is struck between private property rights and law enforcement's effective ability to do their job in pursuing criminal activity," Mr. Snyder said in a statement about the seven-bill package.

The main measure, HB 4504 (PA 148) requires all government entities to report any and all property seizures and forfeitures to the State Police. The State Police will then compile a report on those seizures which will be given to the Legislature and posted on the department's website.

HB 4499 (PA 153) raises the threshold to "clear and convincing evidence" to seize property in nuisance abatements. And HB 4505 (PA 154) the plaintiff in a controlled substance case has to show the seizing property was a violation again by the clear and convincing standard.

Also signed were HB 4500 (PA 149) HB 4503 (PA 150, HB 4506 (PA 151) and HB 4507 (PA 152) which amend different statutes to comport with the new standards.

Mr. Snyder also signed a package of Senate-House bills to help ensure individuals who rely on service animals have greater access to public facilities. The bills were created after a number of incidents where individuals were prevented entrance to some public places because they had a service animal, most commonly a dog, with them.

SB 298 (PA 144) makes it a crime to deny access to someone with a service animal, or to attack a service animal. SB 299 (PA 145) exempts service animals from licensing fees if they are assisting a person with a disability or a veteran with a service-related disability.

HB 4521 (PA 146) requires the Department of Civil Rights to offer voluntary identification for service animals, and HB 4527 (PA 147) makes it a misdemeanor to falsely identify a service animal.

Other bills signed by Mr. Snyder were:

SB 64, PA 155 — PATIENT CARE POLICIES (Hansen) Requires establishment of patient care policies and compliance procedures based on nationally recognized guidelines or best-practice resources, and provides other general amendments.

Signed: October 19, 2015; Effective: January 18, 2016

SB 65, PA 156 — HEALTH PROFESSIONALS (Hansen) Allows employment of or contracting with health professional to provide medical treatment to nursing home patients regardless of business entity status of nursing home.

Signed: October 20, 2015; Effective: January 18, 2016

SB 66, PA 157 — LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANIES (Hansen) Clarifies application of definition of learned profession to certain health professionals.

Signed: October 19, 2015; Effective: January 18, 2016

SB 67, PA 158 — BUSINESS CORPORATIONS (Hansen) Clarifies application of definition of learned profession to certain health professionals.

Signed: October 19, 2015; Effective: January 18, 2016

SB 358, PA 159 — TEACHER CERTIFICATES (Hansen) Revises requirements for professional teaching certificate and requirements for alternative teaching certificate process.

Signed: October 20, 2015; Effective: January 18, 2016

Snyder Names Two To Oakland Circuit Court

Governor Rick Snyder on Tuesday named two people to the Oakland Circuit Court, one of which was Hala Jarbou to succeed new Court of Appeals Judge Colleen O'Brien.

Also named was Jerry Matis to succeed Judge Rudy Nichols (who served in the House for two years and then was elected to the Senate in 1984 succeeding the recalled Sen. Phil Mastin. He was elected to the court in 1990).

Ms. Jarbou is currently with the U.S. Department of Justice as an assistance U.S. attorney in the Drug Task Force. She must run for full term as judge in 2016.

Mr. Matis is in private practice and is also the vice chair of the Oakland County Board of Commissioners. He previously had been on the Rochester City Council. He must run in 2016 to complete the term which will end in 2020.

Committee Roundup

HOUSE NATURAL RESOURCES: The committee began discussions Tuesday on legislation (HB 4908) to remove the sunset date on authority for the Natural Resources Commission to set regulations for recreational feeding of deer and elk.

Supporters said it was important for the commission to retain that authority as part of the effort to combat chronic wasting disease and other communicable diseases.

But Rep. Ken Goike (R-Ray Township) and Rep. Ed McBroom (R-Vulcan) argued for extending the sunset three years.

Mr. Goike said he was happy with the commission's work now, but said that could change. "Why give it away and then have to do legislation to get the power back," he said of legislative control over the commission's actions.

Rep. John Kivela (D-Marquette), sponsor of the legislation, said the legislative process takes too long. "Three years from now, chronic wasting disease is going to be more of a threat, not less," he said.

Amy Trotter with the Michigan United Conservation Clubs said it would be a waste of time to keep a sunset on the authority given the small likelihood any of the parties would reverse their support for the commission's work.

Mr. McBroom noted there was nothing that would prevent the governor from taking the authority from the commission and giving it to the director, as former Governor Jennifer Granholm had done with oversight of invasive species.

Campaign Notes

GILBERT ENDORSEMENT: The United Food and Commercial Workers Local 951 has endorsed Democrat Melissa Gilbert in her run for the 8th U.S. House District.

"Melissa has a proven track record of protecting workers' rights and supporting unions, which strengthen the voices of American workers," John Cakmakci, president of the local, said in a statement. "I am confident that she will fight for Michigan's working families in Congress."

Capital Notebook

SIMON TO CHAIR AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES: Michigan State University President Lou Anna Simon will serve as chair of the Association of American Universities for the next year. Ms. Simon was elected to the post by the association's board on Tuesday.

The association includes 62 of the top research universities in the United States and Canada, and both promotes university research and the relationship between the United States government and university research.

As chair, Ms. Simon will act as the spokesperson for the association, especially on issue that directly concern research universities.

GORZ JOINS MAC: Elizabeth Gorz has joined the Michigan Association of Counties as the organization's governmental affairs associate. Before joining the counties organization, she was a lobbyist at Capitol Affairs, and had been a staffer for former Senate Majority Leader and now U.S. Rep. Mike Bishop (R-Rochester), and an aide to former Sen., now U.S. Rep. John Moolenaar (R-Midland) and to Sen. Tory Rocca (R-Sterling Heights).

Volume #54, Report #209 -- Wednesday, October 21, 2015

House Republicans Go It Alone, Pass Road Funding Plan

House Republicans on Wednesday found the votes, mostly within their own caucus, to pass a $1.2 billion road funding plan with no guarantees of support from Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } or { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }.

The plan involved $600 million in new revenue through a gas tax increase and registration fee increases and $600 million from existing sources. An income tax rollback and an expansion of the Homestead Property Tax credit are also included.

Business groups were also split in their reception of the plan with some seeing it as a breakthrough and others as fiscally irresponsible (see separate story).

"I think that this is a very good plan," House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant) said after the bills passed. "We are going to be working with our partners. This is a huge step forward. I think this is a good grand compromise plan."

But House Democrats tore the plan apart as irresponsible and said the only reason the House Republicans wanted to vote on a plan this week is because Mr. Meekhof (R-West Olive) "challenged" Mr. Cotter to take a vote on a plan the quadrant leaders had been discussing.

"Let's just set the record straight here for everyone," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=269101&locid=1" } (D-Fraser), the minority vice chair of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee. "This is a knee-jerk reaction plan simply to match egos with our counterparts in the Senate."

Those talks fell apart last week, with House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268401&locid=1" } (D-Auburn Hills) concerned about an income tax rollback.

Mr. Meekhof called for Mr. Cotter to hold a vote on the plan anyway. Mr. Cotter refused. At that point, as Gongwer News Service first reported Tuesday, Mr. Cotter began attempting to put together support for a 600/600 plan that could pass with Republican support only.

And about 9 p.m. Wednesday, he did.

It was seen as a retort both to Mr. Meekhof and Mr. Greimel.

"This plan is an embarrassment to the Legislature and it has managed to combine most of the worst aspects of the terrible plans we have seen over the course of the last year," Mr. Greimel said.

The plan would include a 3.3-cent increase effective in 2018 in the overall fuel tax, as well as an additional 4 cents for diesel to bring it up to the gas tax level effective in 2017.

The plan would increase registration fees by $400 million total, averaging $55 additional per vehicle for both passenger and commercial vehicles ($40 for passenger vehicles).

To offset the tax increases, the plan would increase the amount of homestead property tax credit available by both increasing the amount of income affected, to 3.5 percent from 3.4 percent, and increasing the income cap to $60,000, with the phase-out of the credit starting at $51,000. That is a $10,000 increase from the current caps.

The phase-in of the plan would provide $400 million for fiscal year 2016-17 and increase to $1.2 billion by FY 2020-21. Part of the increase is General Fund, which would increase from $150 million in FY 2018-19 to $600 million the final year.

The tax credit offset would start with $40 million in FY 2017-18 and increase to $200 million in FY 2020-21.

The plan also includes a proposed income tax roll-back beginning in 2019 if general fund revenue outpaces inflation.

Democrats criticized the income tax rollback for not having a floor and said it could severely strain the General Fund.

"It's a fiscal time bomb," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=267701&locid=1" } (D-Royal Oak)."And I don't know if anybody on this floor knows just how explosive it could be."

But Mr. Cotter said the income tax rollback was a crucial feature of the final plan in terms of getting votes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB41401" }, the income tax rollback bill, is not tie-barred to the other bills in the package.

The bills passed with varying support, with 54 votes needed for passage, some bills passed narrowly: The gasoline tax increase passed 56-50 ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB461401" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB461601" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB473801" } ); { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB473601" } boosting vehicle registration fees passed 55-51; The competitive bidding bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB461001" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB461101" }) and the expansion of the Homestead Property Tax Credit ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB437001" }) passed 62-44; the income tax rollback passed 61-45 and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB473701" } concerning warranties passed 101-5.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=263501&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) was the only Democrat to vote for many of the bills other than the legislation regarding warranties.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268601&locid=1" } (R-Utica) said the plan would "literally" pave our roads.

"Today we vote for investing in our future," he said. "We vote for tax relief for seniors, and families. ... We are choosing to govern. Today the residents of Michigan have a good roads solution."

Now the question is what the Senate and Mr. Snyder will do. The speculation was rife Wednesday night that Mr. Snyder could relent on his concerns about the impact to the General Fund.

"Forward progress is a good thing, though (the) governor does have some concerns," Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel said, saying any solution must be "fiscally responsible."

Said Mr. Meekhof in a statement: "I am happy the House sent over an idea for the Senate to consider. I look forward to talking with the governor and legislative leaders about the proposal. I have not had an opportunity to review the legislation, yet. The next step is for my fellow caucus members and I to review the details."

Business Groups Divided On Road Funding Plan

Business Leaders for Michigan came out strongly against the plan, saying it relies too heavily on the General Fund.

"We believe this is unsustainable and fiscally irresponsible," the group said in a statement. "The state General Fund has not grown in real terms since 1999. Redirecting $600 million from the General Fund to roads means fewer dollars would be available to make college more affordable, train Michigan workers and incent job creation. All are important to our state's future. We should not have to choose between them. The plan adopted by the House would fix one problem but create another."

The group called for the Senate to pass a plan that fixes roads without putting other important priorities at risk.

Also voicing concern, prior to the vote, was the Detroit Regional Chamber, at least on the idea of going beyond $400 million from the General Fund for roads. While the chamber urged the Legislature to act, it warned, "further dedication of the General Fund beyond the $400 million ... would be short-sighted and run counter to Michigan's best interests."

But the Michigan Chamber of Commerce hailed the House vote.

"We commend Speaker Cotter and the House GOP for taking action this evening to pass a comprehensive plan to fix Michigan's roads," said Michigan Chamber President and CEO Rich Studley in a statement. "Breaking the impasse on this key issue is an important and positive step forward."

And the National Federation of Independent Business-Michigan praised the lower reliance on higher taxes and fees than other plans.

"Speaker Cotter and House Republicans deserve credit for listening to what the voters said with the Proposal 1 defeat - more prioritization of spending and less reliance on funding roads with across the board tax hikes," said NFIB State Director Charlie Owens in a statement. "The House plan attempts to look at existing resources and balance any tax increases with cuts in other taxes."

Snyder Names Flint Water Task Force

With controversy growing over how the state handled the water crisis in Flint, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } on Wednesday named a five-member independent advisory task force to investigate actions by the state involving water use and testing in the city.

As Mr. Snyder made the announcement, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=306801&locid=1" } (D-Flint) and Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) called for the federal Environmental Protection Agency to investigate the controversy and its handling by the Department of Environmental Quality.

Mr. Snyder's announcement and the separate calls by Mr. Kildee and Mr. Ananich come as revelations of some internal emails from the DEQ brought into question how seriously some officials viewed the problem.

When the state announced earlier this month it would push for Flint to be reconnected to the Detroit Water and Sewerage System - the city's emergency manager decided in 2014 to draw water from the Flint River while the city prepared to join a pipeline drawing water from Lake Huron after no agreement could be reached on a short-term contract with the Detroit system - Mr. Snyder said he would create the independent body.

Along with looking into how the state handled the crisis, which after more than a year of complaints about water taste and smell broke wide open this past summer when tests showed elevated levels of lead in the water, the task force is to make recommendations to the state for "future guidelines to protect the health and safety of all state residents."

Co-chairing the task force will be former Senate Majority Leader Ken Sikkema, now with Public Sector Consultants, and former Democratic Rep. Chris Kolb, now with the Michigan Environmental Council.

Also named to the task force is Matthew Davis of the University of Michigan Health System, Eric Rothstein of the Galardi Rothstein Group and Lawrence Reynolds of Mott Children's Health Center of Flint.

Mr. Snyder said he wanted an "unbiased report" that looked at past actions affecting the Flint water situation and recommendations to help ensure that all state residents have access to safe drinking water. He said administration officials would cooperate fully with the task force.

There was no time frame set on when the task force would issue a report.

Mr. Ananich on Wednesday, meanwhile, released a letter to the U.S. EPA asking for a formal review of the DEQ's handling of the Flint water situation, emphasizing that the public needed to know if "the misapplication of federal water testing rules was intentional or due to negligence.

"Our citizens deserve answers," Mr. Ananich said.

And Mr. Kildee also wrote to the EPA, saying to ensure failures like that with the Flint system does not occur again, an investigation into how the crisis occurred is necessary.

"Unfortunately, the citizens of Flint are the victims in this situation. They deserve a thorough investigation and answers to these questions," Mr. Kildee said in his letter.

Snyder: Plan Could Mean More Students In Detroit Schools

One of the structural issues facing Detroit Public Schools is loss of students, but { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said his plan to restructure the district could reverse that.

The plan Mr. Snyder outlined this week (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542070101" }) would, among other things, split the district, with educational functions moving to a new entity (new co) and historical debt remaining with the current district (old co).

"By leaving the debt with old co, you can see improved performance and hopefully that will lead parents to say they want to see their children go to DPS," Mr. Snyder said Wednesday on Detroit Public Television's MiWeek.

Mr. Snyder said his plan is also designed to balance the needs of the district with the desire of those outside Detroit to have control of the funds funneled there.

Under the plan, the old district would remain under the current elected board, but the new entity would be headed by a board appointed in part by the governor and in part by the mayor. That board would, over six years, move to an elected body.

Mr. Snyder said he had comments from Detroit residents and officials that they would like to see the district remain under elected control, or at least move back to that more quickly.

"I tried to propose a balance because I got comments from the rest of the state that if the state's making a huge investment, they should have some control," he said.

As to the state funds headed to Detroit under Mr. Snyder's plan, he said it was not substantially different from what the state has done on school pensions since he took office.

"The $70 million compared to what we've been helping districts with MPSERS is actually a smaller obligation," he said of the state funds that have gone directly to the Michigan Public School Employees Retirement System.

And he said not assisting the district could mean more dire consequences.

"If it's not done in this fashion, it's ultimately going to end up in court, not necessarily in bankruptcy, but in court," he said.

Action also needs to come soon, he said. His proposal would have the changes in place before schools start their new fiscal year in July.

"The longer we wait, the better chance we have of having an uncontrolled financial default," he said.

Meekhof: Problems With DPS Plan; Wyant Should Not Be Fired

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } said Wednesday his caucus has a number of concerns with a plan floated by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } earlier this week to reform Detroit Public Schools which includes providing $715 million over 10 years to get the district out of debt out of debt.

"There's some things in there to like and a lot of things we have concern over. My concern, and my caucus' concern, has been getting an educational experience in front of these kids that gives them the best opportunity to be successful," Mr. Meekhof (R-West Olive) told reporters after session. "We have all these great, new, innovative and cool jobs coming to Detroit, and it would be a shame if we couldn't put an educational experience in front of these kids that gives them the ability to be eligible for those jobs."

He said he hasn't even talked about the money aspect of the proposal with his caucus given how new it is, but there are general concerns there too.

"We want to do the best by all taxpayers, but again, the effort is to try to get performance improvement for those kids so they can get those great jobs in Detroit," he said.

Asked whether he thought the proposal and the money associated with it would be a tough sell to his caucus, Mr. Meekhof said "almost everything" is a tough sell at this point.

"We've done some very innovative and creative things over the last four or five years, very successful, and now we're at some really tough stuff that we have to solve, but that's why people sent us here. And we're going to do it," he said.

FLINT WATER: Mr. Meekhof said he hasn't talked with Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) on whether a legislative hearing could be had to review the actions taken - or not - by varying authorities when it comes to the Flint water crisis, but Mr. Meekhof did not believe Department of Environmental Quality { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=303801&locid=1" } need be fired over it.

"I support Dan. I think he's done a terrific job on a lot of other issues. This one is difficult for a host of reasons because a couple of local governments couldn't get their act together for some period of time," Mr. Meekhof said. "Decisions were made because they thought they needed to make those decisions separately, and the results weren't very good. There's a whole lot of blame to go around, but at this point we've fixed the problem."

Indeed, as Mr. Ananich has previously pointed out, the decision to switch the city's water source and then later deny a request to return to water from the Detroit system had gone through three state-appointed emergency managers. But Mr. Meekhof skirted on whether those people ought to be held responsible either.

"I don't know that the state knew that," he said to a question about the state needing to react if it in fact knew a public health crisis was growing. "If I'm understanding what's happening, they tested at the source, when they bring it in, and that was their only requirement. So after that, I'm not sure what their culpability would be."

Asked if the Legislature had the ability to hold emergency managers responsible for their actions while serving, Mr. Meekhof said he thought that to be the case but would also be interested in seeing "alternate opinions on that."

"I think Director Wyant and folks are doing an after-action and are concerned, and I want to see what their after-action reports are," he said.

Large School Bond Proposals, Road Millages Highlight November Ballot

Thirty-seven proposals for school bonds and nine proposals for new or increased local millages to fund road maintenance are among the many measures voters will see on their local ballots November 3.

Two cities - Keego Harbor in Oakland County and Portage in Kalamazoo County - will vote on whether to decriminalize possession of up to one ounce of marijuana on private property for those 21 and older.

Two other communities - Lathrup Village in Oakland County and Mount Pleasant - will decide on term limits for local elected officials.

Twenty-four school districts will vote on whether to renew their 18-mill property tax on all commercial and non-principal residences. Seven school districts will decide on passing sinking fund property taxes for infrastructure needs, and nine municipalities will vote on tax increases to fund public safety.

Several cities also will elect local elected officials. Among those generating interest at the Capitol are those for the Lansing and East Lansing city councils, as well as the Flint mayor's race, where Mayor Dayne Walling is trying to win re-election amid that city's water crisis.

A Gongwer News Service analysis of ballots in the communities that will hold elections showed 169 separate ballot proposals in school districts, municipalities and other voting jurisdictions.

The largest bond initiatives in school districts for infrastructure improvements:

- $185 million for Rochester schools
- $175 million for the Grand Rapids schools
- $128 million for the Portage schools and a separate bond for $16 million
- $67.5 million for the Saline schools
- $64.86 million for Kentwood schools
- $57.4 million for Woodhaven-Brownstown schools
- $55.24 million for the Kenowa Hills schools

- $49.55 million for the Owosso schools
- $44.6 million for the Hastings schools
- $32.6 million for the Grand Blanc schools
- $27 million and $10.2 million for the Dowagiac schools

Voting on new or increased road millages: Allen Park, Boston Township in Ionia County, Charleston Township in Kalamazoo County, Crystal Lake Township in Benzie County, Clare, Harbor Springs, Lapeer, Meade Township in Huron County and Pipestone Township in Berrien County. Grosse Ile Township in Wayne County also has an $18.8 million bond proposal to fund road and water needs.

Another six municipalities have road millage renewal questions in front of voters.

Lower Fuel Prices Should Permit Savings On Winter Bills, State Says

The Michigan Agency for Energy released its energy { HYPERLINK "http://www.dleg.state.mi.us/mpsc/reports/energy/15winter/index.htm" \t "blank" } for the upcoming winter on Wednesday, expecting residents to save big on their heating bills "thanks to lower fuel prices and predicted warmer-than-normal temperatures," the agency said.

Michigan's energy market is also expected to have adequate reserves and lower prices, the agency said in a statement. With the expectation of a return to normal winter weather, consumption of home heating fuels such as natural gas, propane and distillate will fall, it said, while demand for motor fuels such as gasoline and diesel will rise.

The National Weather Service projects Michigan to have a 40-to-60 percent chance of a warmer than normal winter, as well as a 40 percent chance of a drier than normal winter.

Michigan's total electricity sales in 2015 are expected to decrease by 0.2 percent from 2014 sales, assuming normal weather for the rest of the year, the agency determined. The projected decrease is driven by the industrial sector, whose usage is expected to fall by 4.4 percent, while residential demand is projected to decrease by 0.5 percent. The commercial sector expected to increase by 3.6 percent, it said.

Total natural gas sales are projected to increase by 2.1 percent in 2015 to 859.5 billion cubic feet assuming normal winter weather for the remainder of the year, the agency found. The increase is primarily due to consumption in the electric generation sector, it said.

"In recent years, the electric power industry has begun a shift toward natural gas generation, in part to reduce air pollutants and in part to take advantage of lower fuel costs," the agency said. "With an expected return to normal winter weather, natural gas consumption for the residential and commercial sectors should fall below 2014 levels."

The average residential winter natural gas bill for the four largest utilities in Michigan is expected to average $512, an 18 percent reduction from last year.

Michigan propane usage is projected to decrease by 5.8 percent in 2015 assuming normal winter weather for the remainder of the year. Colder than normal temperatures and a concerted effort to promote early fills caused propane use to increase 15 percent in 2014. Propane prices this winter should be the lowest Michigan has seen in many years, the agency said.

U.S. crude oil production averaged 8.7 million barrels per day in 2014, the highest production levels seen in decades. Continued growth is expected through the 2015 calendar year, reaching 9.2 million barrels per day in 2015, but is expected to retreat in 2016 as new investments are reduced in light of current crude oil prices.

Finally, gas sales in Michigan are projected to increase by 2.1 percent in 2015, marking the third-straight year of increased demand. Consumption increases in 2015 are likely due to significant decreases in the retail cost of gasoline that resulted from lower crude oil prices.

In fact, the AAA Fuel Report determined the average price of unleaded gasoline in Michigan was $2.48 on October 1, 2015, down 26 percent from the same time last year when it averaged $3.36.

Johnson: County Treasurer's Office Needs Relationship With Legislature, Governor

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161801&locid=1" } is one of several candidates who have recently thrown their hat in the ring to be the next Wayne County Treasurer, and he said Wednesday his qualifications and relationships in the legislative and executive branch could make him a good candidate.

The Detroit Free Press { HYPERLINK "http://www.freep.com/story/news/local/michigan/wayne/2015/10/16/eight-apply-become-wayne-countys-next-treasurer/74071732/" \t "blank" } that eight applications had been received for the position in the wake of the decision by current County Treasurer Raymond Wojtowicz to retire. Mr. Johnson (D-Highland Park) is said to be up against former Rep. Phil Cavanagh, a Democrat from Redford Township, as well as Etta Wilcoxon, who had previously run for Detroit city clerk and mayor; David Szymanski, who retired in September as former chief deputy county treasurer; Richard Hathaway, chief assistant to Prosecutor Kym Worthy; Beverly Kindle-Walker, who has run for county treasurer numerous times; James Williams IV, a former Wayne County Commission candidate; and George "Jerry" Paffendorf, who heads Detroit data firm Loveland Technologies.

"Michigan probably needs to undertake a very comprehensive rewrite of our property tax rules and our codes. It's how we fund our cities, how we fund our schools. I think it's a broken system," Mr. Johnson told Gongwer News Service Wednesday. "I think a lot of that begins with stabilization of what it means to be the Wayne County Treasurer's Office and the property tax ordinances down there that govern the area. Wayne County is centrally important to not just Southeast Michigan but Michigan as a whole because when Wayne County is broken, the entire state does not work."

Mr. Johnson said the county is losing so much money in property as vacant or abandoned lots continue to go up for auction, and he's interested in changing that.

"I actually think, from the perspective that Wayne County has been a leader over the years in county government, that that office is as important as the work the Wayne County Executive has to do, if it can ever get right," he said. "I think part of getting right is having a legislative relationship here with both the legislative and the executive. I think then Michigan becomes a better place for people to live, work, play and pray."

The Free Press said a three-person committee made up of Wayne County Clerk Cathy Garrett, Chief Probate Judge Freddie Burton Jr. and Ms. Worthy are expected to meet at 2 p.m. Thursday in room 700A of the Coleman A. Young Municipal Center to discuss applicants - a meeting that is open to the public.

Mr. Johnson said interviews are currently slated for early November, though it remains unclear if every candidate will be interviewed or just a select few the committee determines are the best fit.

Pavlov Announces Hearings On Academically Failing Schools

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=93801&locid=1" } on Wednesday announced his Senate Education Committee will conduct a series of hearings, beginning November 4, on Michigan's academically failing schools.

The hearings will involve the committee and State { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=393401&locid=1" }, Department of Education staff, Richard McLellan and former Oakland Schools Superintendent Vickie Markavitch. Invited guests also include State School Reform Officer Natasha Baker and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s Senior Advisor for Education, Karen McPhee.

The hearings are slated to begin at 8:30 a.m., a statement from Mr. Pavlov's (R-St. Clair) office indicated, and official public notices will still be posted for each hearing as the meetings approach.

The purpose, Mr. Pavlov's office indicated, is to continue the conversation on the fiscal health of the state's public schools, especially in light of Mr. Snyder's recent proposal for Detroit Public Schools (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542070101" }) and work the Legislature completed earlier this year on an "early warning system" for financially distressed schools.

"The academic health of our schools is equally important, and given the Legislature's purview over elementary and secondary education provided for in the Michigan Constitution, it is appropriate that the Senate Education Committee should lead this discussion," the statement said.

Large-Scale Dog Breeder Regulations Clear Committee

A bill regulating large-scale dog breeding kennels with 15 intact female dogs used for breeding in the state would be required to pay a $500 fee under the H-3 version reported from the House Appropriations Committee Wednesday.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB489801" } , under its original version, would have required a $25 fee to be paid by the kennels.

The bill was sent to the full House 24-2, with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=179401&locid=1" } (R-Saginaw Township) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=274601&locid=1" } (D-Ann Arbor) voting no. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=207001&locid=1" } (D-Saint Clair Shores) abstained.

Under the bill, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development would receive $10,000 to implement the requirements.

However, the department would not perform regular inspections of the kennels and would largely rely on complaints and local animal control for kennel inspections.

The department would be required, 18 months after the bill is enacted and annually for four years after, to submit a report on:

- the number of registrations,
- the approximate number of animals housed at each registered location,
- the number of inspections performed,
- the number of complaints received,
- the number of penalties arising from complaints, and
- recommendations regarding staffing levels and best practices for working with partners.

Kennels found in violation of the regulations would be subject to a $5,000 fine.

Ms. Roberts offered two amendments on the bill but neither was adopted. The first would require the department to do unannounced inspections of at least 50 percent of the kennels.

"I feel the intent of the bill is good, and looking at some of these regulations they're a step in the direction. I just feel that there need to be inspections," she said.

The second amendment would have codified the amount of space that is in a dog enclosure.

In a statement from { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville), the chair of the committee, it said other Midwest states have regulations in place to prevent the establishment of '"puppy mills."

"I'm proud to vote on behalf of these animals," he said. "It's not often that this committee is in a position to take a first step on a moral or ethical issue. I'm thankful to Rep. McCready and the other advocates who brought the issue before us."

The bill establishes requirements for importation and sale of or resale of a dog, as well as vaccination and health certification requirements.

Committee Ties Homestead Credit To Inflation

Seniors and low-income residents would see more money back each year from the Homestead Property Tax Credit under legislation approved Wednesday by the House Tax Policy Committee.

The bill ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB487101" }) would index the credit to inflation. The caps on property value and income would also increase with inflation under the plan.

The program provides a credit for property taxes exceeding 3.5 percent of household income, with seniors able to claim all of that and low-income families 60 percent. But current law caps the credit at $1,200, the property taxable value at $135,000 and income at $50,000 (those with incomes more than $40,000 lose 10 percent of the credit for each additional $1,000).

As reported from committee, the changes would begin with the 2016 tax year. The bill also makes clear that the Consumer Price Index would apply to total household resources.

Though the committee did not take testimony on the issue Wednesday, the Michigan Catholic Conference praised movement on the bill.

"This is good tax policy that addresses the economic reality for Michigan's low-income families and senior citizens," Michigan Catholic Conference Vice President for Public Policy and Advocacy Tom Hickson said in a statement. "Each year people see their day to day costs rise due to inflation; this policy addresses those increases and provides relief for those who experience daily the hardships of a strained family budget. House Bill 4871 is a welcome step toward recognizing the dignity of lower-income residents and seniors."

The committee also reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB34901" }, moving up the date on which county treasurers can send delinquency notices; and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB36901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB37001" }, which exempt equipment used in producing alcoholic from sales and use taxes as industrial processing equipment.

Bill Would Allow More Residential Maintenance Work Without License

The House Regulatory Reform Committee on Wednesday took up a bill that would increase the current threshold for when licensure is required for performance of residential improvement work from $600 to $4,000.

Currently, a license is not needed by a person working on one project by one or more contracts if the aggregate contract price for labor, material and any other item is less than $600. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB428201" } increases that to $4,000.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB428101" } would modify how the funds in the Builders Enforcement Fund could be used. Under the bill, not more than 30 percent could be used for enforcement purposes and not more than 70 percent to issue grants to a statewide residential building and trade association for workforce development and outreach programs related to the residential building industry.

"This allows for those who do handyman work to not go through the entire licensing process for basically a handyman businesses," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=219701&locid=1" } (R-Onekama), the chair of the committee and sponsor of the bills.

Mr. Franz said the bill originally increased the dollar amount to $10,000, but after negotiations with the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs agreed on $4,000.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=269101&locid=1" } (D-Fraser) said she would be more comfortable with a figure around $1,500. She said for $4,000, a significant amount of work can be done to a home. And without the license, the department would not be held accountable if something went wrong.

"It really takes away consumer protections," she said.

She also said she was concerned about the amount of funding the department would lose with the reduction of licensing fees.

Lee Schwartz, with the Home Builders Association of Michigan, spoke in support of the bill. He said when the legislation was introduced in previous sessions, the group was not in support, but the $600 threshold does not have many real-world applications.

ANIMAL SHELTERS: The committee also took up { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB491501" }, which would establish holding periods of animals for shelters in the state before other actions could be taken.

Rep. Mike McCready (R-Bloomfield Hills) said the intent of the bill was to allow local shelters to keep animals for longer than the holding period in the bill indicates. But the bill analysis said the holding period is a mandate and pre-empts local ordinances.

Mr. McCready said he would work with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=322001&locid=1" } (D-Lansing), who asking about the holding period, to correct any issues.

Under the bill, for a dog that does not have current, traceable evidence of ownership and is not a candidate for adoption or a sterilization release program, the holding period would be four days. For dogs with traceable evidence of ownership, the period would be seven days.

For cats without current, traceable evidence of ownership, an animal control shelter or an animal protection shelter may observe a zero-day holding period for that cat if it is a candidate for adoption or a sterilization release program.

Amy Trotter with the Michigan United Conservation Clubs advocated for some changes to the bill. Ms. Trotter said the group would like to see the countdown of the holding period begin on the following business day from whenever an animal - particularly dog for her members - was found.

Ms. Trotter said when hunting with dogs, for example, sometimes the owner is not familiar with the area and doesn't immediately know what shelters to contact.

She also noted the group has seen those who oppose hunting with dogs take a collar off of a hunting dog before taking them to a shelter, which, under the bill, would reduce the holding period because the dog would not have traceable evidence of ownership.

Court To Coast Guard: Issue Bridge Permit Or Explain Why Not

The District of Columbia U.S. Court of Appeals has told the U.S. Coast Guard to either issue a navigation permit allowing construction of a second Ambassador Bridge span or explain why.

The order, issued Monday as part of a federal lawsuit the Detroit International Bridge Company has against Canada, requires the Coast Guard to issue a permit by January 4, 2016, or it and the litigants in the case shall explain why a permit has not been issued.

The order is the latest incident in the ongoing battle over new bridges between Detroit and Windsor. While the focus has been on getting final approvals and construction plans for development of the Gordie Howe International Bridge - promoted by { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }, most Detroit-area business and the Canadian government - the owners and operators of the Ambassador Bridge have not given up efforts to build a second span to the 86-year old bridge.

This specific issue - various aspects of the controversy have been litigated - has to do with a navigation permit from the U.S. Coast Guard. Such a permit is needed before a bridge could be built.

In 2009, the Coast Guard issued a draft finding that construction of a second span would have no significant adverse environmental effects.

But it held off on issuing a navigation permit for regulatory reasons. A U.S. District Court found the Coast Guard was justified in delaying the permit.

Mickey Blashfield, spokesperson for the Detroit International Bridge Company, said in response to the order, "The 'delay game' has gone on long enough. We look forward to the Coast Guard's response to the court."

The permit would be an important step in gaining final approval for a new bridge, though a question of whether the Canadian government would permit the second span to proceed remains.

Senate OKs Blue Alert System

A "blue alert" system to broadcast information on attacks on police is heading to { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } for final approval after getting final approval from the Senate Wednesday.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB33601" } saw unanimous approval to concur in a House substitute to the bill that includes a definition of "law enforcement officer" and includes language that a law enforcement agency investigating the incident had information identifying an individual as a suspect connected to the incident.

Under the bill, the Department of State Police would have to establish and maintain a Blue Alert Plan to disseminate information to radio and television stations when a law enforcement officer was killed or seriously injured by an offender who had presumably not yet been apprehended.

A House Fiscal Agency analysis of the bill determined the bill would have a "significant" fiscal impact on the department to the extent the State Police would encounter costs to develop and maintain such a system, estimated to include $10,000 to develop information technology systems, $10,000 for server storage and $300 a month to operate a plan in partnership with the Michigan Association of Broadcasters.

Various police organizations have spoken in support of the bill.

FAILURE TO YIELD: The chamber also passed by a margin of 36-2 legislation to prescribe a misdemeanor penalty for failure to yield to an approaching emergency vehicle (currently a civil infraction), as well as prescribe felony penalties for failure to yield to an emergency vehicle causing injury or death to emergency personnel ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB42101" }).

The misdemeanor would be punishable by a maximum fine of $500 and/or up to 90 days' imprisonment, while the felony for injury could be punishable by a maximum fine of $1,000 and/or up to two years' imprisonment and the felony for death could be punishable by a maximum fine of $7,500 and/or up to 15 years' imprisonment.

Its companion bill, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB42201" }, amends the Code of Criminal Procedure to add the felonies to sentencing guidelines.

MIOSHA Violations Cited in Ypsilanti, Holland

The Michigan Occupational Safety and Health Administration has issued citations for alleged violations of worker health provisions in two separate cases involving companies in Ypsilanti and Holland.

DMC Consultants, Inc., in Ypsilanti, is facing $265,200 in penalties after a health inspection at two duplexes in the city between July 8, 2015 and August 14, 2015 was conducted and found 14 alleged violations. Citations were issued for a total of seven willful/serious violations related to asbestos at 955 Madison Street, and another five for the same issue at 113 Bell Street.

The company has 15 working days from receipt of the citations to comply or contest the violations and penalties, MIOSHA, part of the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, said in a statement.

In Holland, Gates Electric, Inc. and Electrical Inspection Service, LLC face $357,000 in penalties. MIOSHA's Construction Safety and Health Division conducted a fatality inspection of the two companies at a Brink Warehouse between June 16, 2015 and August 19, 2015, during which time six alleged violations were identified.

Gates Electric was issued four willful and serious citations related to electrical installations while one willful citation was issued to Electric Inspection Service related to the General Duty Clause about following the National Electric Code and power being energized to work operation prior to the completion of installation.

Both companies also have 15 working days from receipt of the citations to respond.

Michigan In Top 15 For Energy Efficiency

Michigan is the 14th most energy efficient state in the nation, the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy said in its annual scorecard released Wednesday.

Michigan received 23.5 points out of a possible 50 points in the { HYPERLINK "http://aceee.org/state-policy/scorecard" \t "blank" }.

Among the highlights the group noted were the loan programs for small businesses for pollution prevention and energy efficiency. It also lauded the state for having energy efficiency standards for state buildings.

The group also praised the state for the energy efficiency measures included in { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2007SB21301" }, which is currently under discussion for revision.

Among the areas where the state lagged was not having an energy efficiency standard for state fleets and adopting federal efficiency standards for both commercial and residential buildings.

But environmental interests raised issue with the rating though, noting that Michigan's ranking slipped from 12th place.

"Michigan's energy efficiency standard has saved families in Detroit and across the state billions of dollars on their energy bills and we must build upon this progress, not turn back the clock," said Guy Williams, president and CEO of Detroiters Working for Environmental Justice, in a statement. "Michigan families face the highest electricity costs in the Midwest and we must protect and expand our energy efficiency standard to rein in rising costs."

Committee Roundup

SENATE FAMILIES, SENIORS AND HUMAN SERVICES: The committee reported a package of bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB51701" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB51801" }, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB51901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB52001" }) that would amend various statutes related to child support, specifically that a Michigan tribunal issuing a spousal-support order consistent with state law have continuing, exclusive jurisdiction to modify that order throughout the existence of the support obligation. Similarly, a tribunal could not modify a spousal-support order issued by a tribunal of another state or foreign county having continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over that order.

The bills are to ensure the state is in compliance with current federal law on such matters or else risk losing about $175 million in child support funding for the current fiscal year. There is also a larger potential fiscal risk in that if the bills are not passed, the state may not be in compliance with policies governing the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant, risking another $775 million in federal funding, a Senate Fiscal Agency analysis of the bills determined.

The bills were reported with unanimous approval and no amendments.

Campaign Notes

ROAD ASSOCIATION PAC ENDORSES HOWELL, STOREY: The County Road Association of Michigan RUSH-PAC announced its endorsements of candidates in the special election primary on Wednesday, choosing Republican Gary Howell of North Branch in the 82nd House District and Jim Storey of Holland in the 80th House District.

Mr. Howell is running to fill the vacancy caused by former Rep. Todd Courser's resignation and Mr. Storey is running to fill the vacancy caused by Rep. Cindy Gamrat's expulsion. The PAC also endorsed Democrat David LaGrand of Grand Rapids in the 75th House District.

Mr. LaGrand is running to fill the vacancy caused by former Rep. Brandon Dillon becoming chair of the Michigan Democratic Party.

"With legislators still unable to pass the type of road funding package needed in 2015, now more than ever RUSH-PAC recognizes the importance of supporting candidates who understand how important Michigan's local road system is to our economy and quality of life," said Denise Donohue, RUSH-PAC treasurer and director of the County Road Association of Michigan.

LASINSKI OFFICIALLY ANNOUNCES CAMPAIGN FOR 52ND: Democrat Donna Lasinski of Scio Township officially announced her campaign to run for the 52nd House District on Wednesday. { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=318101&locid=1" } (D-Saline) currently holds the seat but is forgoing re-election to run for the 7th U.S. House District.

Ms. Lasinski currently serves as the Ann Arbor School Board treasurer and has a long career of education advocacy and volunteer service around Washtenaw County.

"I'm very excited to be running to serve you in Lansing. With a record of making positive change, I will bring a strong voice for our communities to Lansing," she said in a statement. "Together we can secure our kids' future and make sure everyone has access to the quality education they deserve."

Capital Notebook

PORTAGE BUSINESS EXPANSION: The Michigan Strategic Fund approved an $875,000 grant for Pro Services Inc., which provides skilled trades and maintenance technicians to a range of industries, as the company plans to construct a new Center of Excellence and corporate headquarters in Portage.

The project expects to generate a total capital investment of $3.9 million and create 175 jobs, the Michigan Economic Development Corporation said in a statement about the expansion.

MORENCI, ALLOUEZ TOWNSHIP COMMUNITY GRANTS: The Michigan Strategic Fund approved a $250,000 community development block grant fund for job training needed for a KAMCO Industries, Inc. expansion project that includes the acquisition of a building in Morenci. The project expects to generate $22.7 million in private investment and create 60 jobs. Michigan was chosen over other locations in the Midwest, the Michigan Economic Development Corporation noted.

And Keweenaw County was awarded a $20,000 community development block grant fund for the Keweenaw County Mountain Lodge Study Project located in Allouez Township. The project is a best-use study to consider possible change in ownership or operations, expecting to result in future job creation, the MEDC said.

MEDICAID IN THE CLOUD: The state has moved its Medicaid Management Information System to cloud-based servers, which officials said would both improve service delivery and cut costs.

"It's important for Michigan to look for more and better ways to take advantage of technology to improve services for our residents," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said in a statement. "This is an innovative approach, allowing us to more efficiently share information and resources in real-time, helping residents get the health care they need."

The system allows real-time access to data and allows Michigan and Illinois, one of the partners in the project, to share information.

FLU SEASON: The state has confirmed the first three cases of influenza for the season, Department of Health and Human Services officials said in a release Wednesday calling for residents to be vaccinated.

Officials said there was one case of influenza A (H1N1) and three cases of influenza A (H3N2) found October 4-10. The release did not say where the cases were but said all were adults.

Volume #54, Report #220 -- Thursday, November 5, 2015

After Week-Long Negotiations, Energy Bills Sent To House Floor

Major energy legislation cleared the House Energy Policy Committee on Thursday with some significant changes, including changes to the proposed renewable energy definitions and a "goal" for utilities to get 30 percent of production from renewables and energy efficiency.

But advocates for expanding choice, or at least keeping it the same as current law, were not successful.

After convening at 8 a.m., recessing until 2:07 p.m. and then going until 7:45 p.m., coming in and out of order on its fourth attempt this week to meet on the issue, the committee reported HB 4298 - the bill involving choice and utility regulations - 18-7. Rep. Gary Glenn (R-Midland), the vice chair, Rep. Andrea LaFontaine (R-Columbus), Rep. Holly Hughes (R-White River Township), Rep. Tom Barrett (R-Potterville), Rep. Peter Lucido (R-Shelby Township), Rep. Derek Miller (D-Warren) and Rep. Scott Dianda (D-Calumet) all voted no.

HB 4297, dealing with the environmental aspects of energy, cleared the committee 21-3 with Rep. Julie Plawecki (D-Dearborn Heights) abstaining and HB 4575 cleared 19-4 with Ms. Plawecki and Rep. LaTanya Garrett (D-Detroit) abstaining.

Rep. Aric Nesbitt (R-Lawton), the chair of the committee, said his goal is getting the bills finished before the end of the year.

He said utilities are going to make investments and if the state is going to deal with capacity in the long run, it should deal with it proactively instead of reactively, which he believes the legislation does.

"As you can imagine this has been legislation I have been working on for years now and it's the first down, and I look forward to getting to a touchdown," he told reporters after the vote.

Throughout the meeting, and the week, it was clear Mr. Nesbitt was negotiating with House Democrats to get the votes needed for the legislation to clear the committee. House Minority Floor Leader Sam Singh (D-East Lansing) attended the majority of the meeting Thursday and House Minority Leader Tim Greimel (D-Auburn Hills) also attended the meeting briefly and talked to Democrats serving on the panel.

Mr. Glenn has been criticizing the process for much of the week, and continued on Thursday before the vote, saying members likely were not clear on what certain amendments did in the context of a lengthy and complex bill.

But Rep. Bill LaVoy (D-Monroe), the minority vice chair of the committee, said he felt the process was fair and he was grateful the Democrats, despite being in the minority, were included.

Those following the issue said Mr. Nesbitt, if he wanted to get a bill out of the committee, would either need to compromise on choice or on environmental components. For several days, it seemed clear he had opted for the latter option.

Changes to the legislation include not requiring alternative energy suppliers to address local reliability needs unless a projected capacity shortfall was determined. Under the amendment there would be no changes to requirements on the alternative suppliers unless the Public Service Commission made certain determinations involving capacity.

Amendments adopted to HB 4298 would require alternative energy consumers to remain with the utility, if they go back, for 15 years if it doesn't cause an increased cost. For those consumers who would cause an increased cost, they would have to stay with the utility for 20 years.

Michigan Agency for Energy Executive Director Valerie Brader told the committee the changes regarding additional regulations for alternative suppliers would not go into effect unless there were some extreme circumstances.

But Mr. Glenn was unhappy he could not bring up an alternative energy supplier - or advocate - to confirm or deny Ms. Brader's statement. He said he simply doesn't know if the new language effectively kills choice or not.

An approved amendment offered by Mr. LaVoy would set up an energy efficiency program.

Another Democratic amendment would include in the language describing the Integrated Resource Plan that utilities would have a goal of reaching 30 percent of energy production through renewable energy and reduction of energy waste through energy efficiency by 2025.

Rep. Julie Plawecki (D-Dearborn Heights) noted it was a goal and not a mandate on utilities.

Another amendment provided financial incentives for utilities achieving annual incremental energy waste reduction of between 1.5 and 3 percent.

Another approved amendment would add a general taxpayer to the Public Service Commission with the intent of representing the average consumer, said Rep. Ed McBroom (R-Vulcan), the sponsor of the amendment. It would also increase the commission from three members to five.

It was not immediately clear if that amendment would remain the final version of the bill. Mr. Nesbitt said he would continue to work with Mr. McBroom.

Changes to HB 4297 include an amendment from Mr. Nesbitt and makes changes to the renewable portfolio standard, removing what the federal government does not consider renewable energy.

Another approved amendment offered by Mr. LaVoy "tightens up" the definition of renewable energy, but still expands the definition from the current law, including biomass and geothermal.

And another amendment, from Ms. Hughes, would ensure pet coke, hazardous waste, coal waste and scrap tires were not included in the renewable energy definition. That addressed a major criticism from Democrats, though some forms of waste to energy could still count.

Mr. Glenn attempted to make a variety of amendments regarding the 10 percent choice market, including ensuring all schools, community colleges and universities would not count against the cap.

Ms. Hughes attempted to pass an amendment, which she said the Michigan Chamber of Commerce supported, that would keep the choice market the same as current law. That amendment failed 10-10 with five members abstaining.

Throughout the committee meeting Thursday, which went at ease several times, comments from members indicated they weren't pleased with the process.

Mr. Glenn, when the committee first began, said he could not vote on Mr. Nesbitt's amendments because they were several pages and he had no time to know what they did.

Later, Mr. Glenn made another comment about the amendments and Mr. Nesbitt quipped: "The reason I did it as an amendment and not an additional sub is because of the criticism I've received," he said.

"Well I had zero time to read the amendments," Mr. Glenn said.

Mr. Glenn said after the meeting that he didn't think the legislation would be well received in the full House, particularly the Republican caucus. He said there would likely be concerns regarding the choice piece of the legislation.

Mr. Nesbitt said a vast majority of committee members supported the bills and he believes he would have the support of a majority of the House Republican caucus.

On the criticism on the process, Mr. Nesbitt said the legislation has been up for almost the entire year and everyone has their own thought son how to improve bills.

"This in terms of the legislative process, this is a part of it, we allowed a lot of amendments to be debated," he said, also adding more than 120 people have testified throughout the year.

But Mr. Glenn said he felt members were being pressured by the time frame, knowing the meeting would end with a vote. He said many of the questions members have will be answered in the coming weeks.

REACTION: Statements poured in Thursday evening after the committee reported the bill, with many slamming the choice provisions.

Michigan Freedom Fund President Terri Reid said the bills were reported after a "rushed" and "secretive" process.

"The result is substitute language approved today that hurts Michigan ratepayers, schools and job creators who already face the highest electric costs in the region," Ms. Reid said in a statement. "Electric choice should be expanded, not eliminated. Competition serves as the best method of lowering energy costs for Michigan's hardworking families and keeping the large, monopoly utility providers honest."

Wayne Kuipers, Energy Choice Now executive director, said the bill would kill electric choice, which has saved $1.1 billion for those "lucky enough" to have it.

"The process of passing this utility-friendly/consumer-hostile legislation out of committee was as flawed and damaging as the bill itself," he said in a statement. "No public testimony was allowed on what was essentially - as verified by the governor's own energy advisor - a brand new bill before the committee. The bottom line is: the members of this committee just passed a bill that will potentially cost 40 percent of Michigan's public schools $24 million annually and cost Michigan job providers nearly $100 million each year."

And environmental advocates said the bills do not go far enough.

"The only way to hold utilities accountable for increasing our use of clean, renewable energy is through mandates for renewable energy and energy efficiency," Anne Woiwode, conservation director for Sierra Club, Michigan Chapter, said in a statement. "The Nesbitt bill is a giveaway to utility shareholders and puts polluter profits before Michigan's ratepayers and natural resources."

"The bills passed out of committee tonight are a step in the right direction, but do not go far enough to increase our use of clean, renewable energy, or to ensure we lower energy costs through reducing energy waste," Jack Schmitt, deputy director for the Michigan League of Conservation Voters, said in a statement. "We can and must do better to build upon the success of our clean energy standards. We look forward to working through the legislative process to strengthen this policy and to ensure Michigan continues to increase its use of renewable energy and takes further strides in reducing energy waste."

Finally, MI Air MI Health Coalition Director Rory Neuner said: "The Nesbitt plan ignores the health impacts of our energy choices and that's why health professionals are urging legislators to go back to the drawing board. We urge the legislature to support forward-looking legislation that will reduce dangerous pollution and protect public health."

Canvassers Rejects Prevailing Wage Petitions, State Continues Investigation

At a minimum, some of those who circulated petitions for Protecting Michigan Taxpayers in its effort to repeal the prevailing wage could face misdemeanor charges for lying on the circulator certificates on those petitions, a move both sides of the issue welcomed at Thursday's Board of State Canvassers meeting.

But opponents of the petition said the criminal investigation should go higher up the ranks than the circulators, and Elections Director Chris Thomas said his bureau would continue to investigate the petition gathering process to determine if there are additional safeguards needed.

The vote to reject the petitions as insufficient was fairly easy, with both opponents of the drive, Michigan Prevails, and Protecting Michigan Taxpayers supporting the move.

The staff report on the petition, released earlier in the week, found fewer than half of the sample signatures pulled was valid. Of the 503 signatures in the sample, only 301 were valid, with 104 not registered voters and 63 duplicates. At least 315 valid signatures were needed in the sample to make it worth checking more signatures and 348 valid signatures were needed to simply designate the petitions as sufficient.

Mr. Thomas said it was only through the checking opponents to the change made that the duplicates were found. He said the petitions would have been declared sufficient with only the department's check.

In the end, he said the petition had the lowest rate of valid signatures in any petition submitted since the state started using the sampling process.

"The circulating company clearly failed to put circulators in the field who could comply with this law," he said.

Proponents of the plan conceded there were not enough signatures.

"We reviewed the staff report and would urge this board to adopt the findings in the staff report," Eric Doster, attorney for Protecting Michigan Taxpayers, said. "After review of this matter, we have no problem forwarding this matter to the proper law enforcement authorities."

Dave Waymire, spokesperson for Michigan Prevails, argued after the meeting that the criminal investigation should go further than the circulators or even Silver Bullet, the company contracted to hire circulators. He said officials with the campaign knew of the rampant duplicates and other problems with the circulators and did not act.

"The question is, what did they know and when did they know it?" he said.

Mr. Thomas said at a minimum those circulators who signed the petitions themselves multiple times could face charges.

Mr. Doster said the campaign was still considering what, if any, action it would take against Silver Bullet.

The bigger issue, Mr. Thomas said, is preventing a repeat.

"The question going forward is whether this petition will remain an outlier or will it become the way business is done," he said. "Clearly, a close look at this petition is necessary to determine whether additional safeguards are necessary to safeguard the Michigan elections process."

Board members agreed on the need to review the petition process, but members from both parties chided the Legislature for failing to act on recommendations the board has already made.

In particular, board members pointed out that they will be meeting next week to decide whether a recall petition against Governor Rick Snyder includes factual allegations, but the law does not require that the drafter include support for the allegations when filing the petition.

Meekhof Talks DPS, Post-Roads Agenda

Now that the Legislature has sent a road funding solution to Governor Rick Snyder, Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof sees energy policy reform and a solution to the growing problems of academic and financial instability with Detroit Public Schools as two of the major issues next on his chamber's to-do list.

"We don't tackle simple things," he said. "They are major policy issues for the state, and I've had some very, very open and fruitful discussions about how we go about it."

He said he expects to rely "very heavily" on Sen. Mike Nofs (R-Battle Creek) to lead the discussion on the best energy policy for Michigan as many provisions of the 2008 energy law either expire or need to be updated, and he is working currently on finding sponsors for legislation on DPS from both the Democratic and Republican sides of the aisle.

"I've given no timeline on DPS, but what I have said is it would be very, very important that we put something (together) for these children so they can get a great education and they can get all these really cool, great jobs being created in Detroit," he said.

As to any concerns he might have about the proposal Governor Rick Snyder put forth last month, Mr. Meekhof said all the details are still a work in progress.

"We've been meeting on different occasions with different interest groups and our policy folks, and it's still a work in progress," he said. "It's like every piece of public policy: not everybody is going to agree on it, so we're going to try to find the best possible thing that we can do."

He said his primary focus is on ensuring a quality education for DPS students but did not have any specific details on what that could look like in legislation.

And he said that while it has not currently been in the discussion to leave DPS to the charter school community, it could be a possibility if some agreement couldn't be reached otherwise. But "that would be unfortunate," he said.

Mr. Meekhof said restoration of the school board is a part of the discussion, but again, he was unsure if it will be part of the final solution.

"The folks that are there need to have some accountability and I think they'll want to, because if we're going to help in some way, they're going to want to make sure the process moves forward and we get improvement," he said. "We need different results."

But Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) said that is a very important piece for him and his caucus.

"Whether or not it's required to get votes or not, I haven't spoken to all my colleagues about it, but it's very important to them and to me as well," he said after session.

Mr. Meekhof was uncertain where the financing piece could come from for the DPS fix, but as conversations have been ongoing, he is hoping to have at least some legislation on the situation introduced soon, he said.

Ananich Calls On Meekhof, Legislature To Hold Hearings On Flint Water

Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich on Thursday called on Senate Majority Leader Arlan Meekhof and his colleagues to put together legislative hearings to determine what went wrong in Flint, who should be held accountable and how it can be prevented.

Mr. Meekhof said he is waiting for other agencies and task forces to do their work force.

"The folks that are being charged with gathering that information, I want to let them do their work, because I don't want to duplicate their work either," Mr. Meekhof (R-West Olive) told reporters after Mr. Ananich's formal floor speech about his proposal.

Mr. Ananich sent a letter to Mr. Meekhof's office and shared it with the chairpersons of the Senate Oversight, Government Operations and Health Policy committees.

In his speech, Mr. Ananich pointed to further reports on Thursday, especially coming from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, warning of additional health risks of lead in the water. He said such reports only highlight that "this is an ongoing problem, and the Legislature has a unique role and responsibility in thoroughly examining what went wrong, what still needs to be fixed, and how to ensure this sort of crisis never happens again."

He said the taxpayers who have essentially footed the bill on a $9.3 million supplemental appropriation in emergency funds for the city have a right to know how that money is being spent as well.

"The fact that several reviews have been promised by other entities does not remove the need for us to exercise our oversight role. It actually highlights the areas in which our investigation would strengthen the process," he said. "Each of the other reviews are either agencies investigating themselves or experts who do not have the powers or accountability elected officials have."

Mr. Ananich said the benefit of legislative hearings is primarily subpoena power "to make sure everyone who needs to be asked questions are forced to answer them," he said. "We can provide a public, transparent look that none of these approaches (by others) are guaranteed to deliver."

Speaking to reporters after session, Mr. Ananich said, "Folks have shown their willingness to not tell the truth, or be fuzzy with it for sure, but if they're asked a question when someone isn't requiring them to tell the truth, they can continue with that. So I think we can hold them accountable better through the subpoena process."

But Mr. Meekhof did not seem to exercise the same sense of urgency. He said he has been talking with Mr. Ananich about the idea but reiterated he'd like folks in charge of gathering that information currently to do so first.

"We've got a lot of other good stuff in front of us right now, too. We've got energy; we've got Detroit Public Schools. I'm not discounting he says it's important, because he and I have been talking about it," Mr. Meekhof said.

And he said, as he has previously, that he has "very high marks" for Department of Environmental Quality Director Dan Wyant.

"I believe they will be able to find solutions and they will find things that need to be corrected," Mr. Meekhof said.

But Mr. Ananich said an agency investigating itself when it had already potentially skirted doing the right thing is exactly why a different approach needs to be taken, especially by the Legislature.

"We have such troubling individuals in the drinking water division, which is the main division that's supposed to keep us safe, showing time and time again there's some serious problems there," he said. "We need to get to the bottom of how that happened and how we can address it.

He added that there is still a role for the agencies investigating themselves or the various task forces associated with the drinking water problem in Flint, but those reviews could take many more months and the Legislature's public hearings would provide a platform for information to potentially come through faster.

"There's a role for them, but I think a thorough investigative process needs to happen," Mr. Ananich said. "Independently would've been preferable, but if that's not going to happen, I think it's our responsibility to do some check and balance just for that alone, for us to do it."

HOUSE CALLS FOR FEDERAL INVESTIGATION: While Mr. Ananich made his request on the Senate floor Thursday, Flint-area state representatives pushed for a federal investigation into the Department of Environmental Quality after a story came out Thursday claiming the department knowingly dropped two lead test samples to avoid exceeding a federal drinking water standard.

Had the tests been counted, action could have been taken earlier on the water crisis, they alleged in a statement late Thursday.

Rep. Sheldon Neely (D-Flint) called for Mr. Wyant to be removed from his post by the governor and sent several letters to the governor and Attorney General Bill Schuette requesting such, a statement indicated.

"It is shameful and appalling to me that the men and women we entrust to keep us safe at the highest levels of state government would purposely put the health of Flint's residents at risk," Mr. Neeley said. "For the past year, the Flint community has been subjected to high levels of lead in their water. Action clearly could have been taken earlier to protect the children who have been the most at risk. This behavior borderlines on criminal activity. The governor should immediately terminate the director of the DEQ and all culpable members of the staff."

Rep. Phil Phelps (D-Flushing) said the DEQ's explanation in the story (by Michigan Radio, the statement indicates) doesn't add up.

"This is just one more instance of the DEQ covering something up, and even more of a reason they fought me when I sent a FOIA requesting information relating to the water crisis in Flint," Mr. Phelps said. "There must be a full federal investigation into the state on how they handled these samples."

Report: Construction Could Renew Lead Contamination In Flint Homes

Flint is taking steps to be sure its municipal water is not dissolving lead from the inside of old pipes as it passes to consumers, but construction projects that come in contact with those old pipes could still make them hazardous, a final U.S. Environmental Protection Agency report on the issue said.

Department of Environmental Quality officials noted the report says they are already implementing the recommendations from an earlier draft of the report.

The report, issued Wednesday, said not only are the lead pipes themselves a risk, but any pipes downstream of them in the water system could also pose a risk. The pipes develop scale inside that could contain lead where the pipe itself is lead or where the water coming into the pipe first ran through lead, the report said.

"Consequently, even with corrosion control treatment in place in the future, physical disturbances will be capable of dislodging the high lead-bearing scale and sediment from non-lead pipes as well as lead pipes, as was the case in the earlier EPA study," the report said. It included pictures from studies of another water system that showed where the scale had been dislodged by construction near the water lines.

The report did note that one of the first homes tested based on complaints of water quality problems had a longer than usual lead service line. Flint officials said the home was probably one of the first on the block and so had a service line that ran to a water main on a major street rather than the newer main that runs down the street on which it is located.

The report recommended that EPA develop a procedure for minimizing effects of construction near or including pipes that might have lead-containing scale in them. It also recommended education efforts for both residents and contractors on the risks of disturbing the pipes.

"Residents should be notified of scheduled work by water and non-water utilities and informed of the potential risk of increased lead levels due to these disturbances," the report said.

The letter attached to the report notes that the state and Flint have already taken steps to correct the issue, including changing back to Detroit's water system.

Even so, Flint-area legislators are calling on their colleagues and the administration to do more to ensure the problem not only does not happen again, but the appropriate agencies or individuals be held accountable (see separate story).

"We appreciate the EPA's acknowledgement that most of the recommendations from the draft version of the report are already being implemented by DEQ," department spokesperson Brad Wurfel said.

But he said the EPA has also taken some of the blame for the situation and issued new copper and lead guidelines designed to clarify some of the confusion that led to the actions in Flint.

"The ambiguity of the lead and copper rule on the issue of corrosion control has been central to the situation in Flint," Mr. Wurfel said. "We appreciate having that acknowledged and clarified. It can only help Michigan and every other state into the future."

Senate Passes Alternative Teaching Certificate Bill, Ends Dower Rights

Individuals who are not certified or endorsed to teach certain critical shortage disciplines such as writing, journalism or health sciences might still be able to teach under legislation passed largely along party lines in the Senate on Thursday.

SB 491 has seen numerous changes since first introduced, but in the bill's final form, an individual's service as a full-time instructor in a field of specialization at the college level would be considered occupational experience in that field, which is one of the conditions for teaching as a non-certificated teacher.

Such an individual could teach in a field of specialization if he or she had, in the previous seven years, at least five years of occupational experience (rather than a major or a graduate degree in that field) for certain subjects, or met other requirements if teaching a foreign language, a Senate Fiscal Agency analysis indicated.

"Expanding the number of subjects is a problem. It dilutes the teaching pool by putting more unqualified people in the classroom," Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) said in a statement through his spokesperson. "Rather than striving for the best, we are setting for the lowest common denominator. Michigan kids deserve better."

The bill also requires an alternative teaching program (for an interim teaching certificate) to include training in classroom management.

Certain career and technical education instructors would be exempt from the requirement to have a bachelor's degree in order to receive an interim teaching certificate, and the Department of Education would determine what specifically those areas would be.

The bill allows an individual seeking an interim teaching certificate to have more than one subject matter endorsement if he or she had more than one graduate degree or had a bachelor's degree with more than one major, as well as meeting other requirements.

Initially, the bill cleared the chamber on a 30-8 vote with all Democrats except Mr. Ananich, Sen. Virgil Smith of Detroit and Sen. Bert Johnson of Highland Park voting in opposition. But a motion to reconsider the vote was later made and the bill passed on a 27-11 with all Democrats except Mr. Smith voting in opposition and Sen. Tory Rocca (R-Sterling Heights) joining them.

DOWER RIGHTS: Some controversy was generated over a package of bills (SB 558, SB 559 and SB 560) seeking to repeal certain provisions of law related to dower rights, or a wife's right, upon her husband's death, to a life estate in one-third of the land that he owned.

SB 558 specifies that in most cases a wife's dower right would be abolished and unenforceable either through statute or common law, though that would not apply to a widower's dower elected by a woman whose husband died before the bill's effective date or a widow's right to elect dower under the Estates and Protected Individuals Code if her husband died before the bill's effective date.

Sen. Rebekah Warren (D-Ann Arbor) on the Senate floor expressed some concerns about the bills as it relates to a woman's right to receive the property or assets she is entitled to in cases of domestic violence relationships or other scenarios.

But bill sponsor Sen. Rick Jones (R-Grand Ledge) said dower "is an ancient, archaic law when women were not supposed to own property. It's outdated and unconstitutional," he said, pointing to the legislation having support from the American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan and others.

"The titles are a complete mess when this happens, and we have many more modern laws protecting both spouses in the case of divorce," Mr. Jones said.

The package was sent to the House on a 34-4 vote, Ms. Warren joined by Sen. Coleman Young II (D-Detroit), Sen. Margaret O'Brien (R-Portage) and Sen. Bert Johnson (D-Highland Park) in opposition.

Snyder Signs Teacher Evaluation Legislation

Governor Rick Snyder signed into law Thursday legislation setting a portion of a teacher's annual evaluation contingent upon student growth during the academic year and requiring districts to select or develop an evaluation tool.

Mr. Snyder's signing of SB 103 (PA 173, immediate effect) brings to a close an arduous, at times acrimonious, years-long effort to overhaul how districts evaluate teacher performance.

"Michigan has wonderful teachers, dedicated to helping all their students reach their full potential and become lifelong learners," Mr. Snyder said in a statement. "This new law helps them grow as educators through improved feedback and evaluations."

Starting in the 2017-18 school year, 25 percent of a teacher's evaluation would be based on student growth. That would rise to 40 percent for the 2018-19 school year.

Growth would be based on two parts. In grades where students take state assessments, the assessments would count for at least 40 percent of the growth measurement. In grades where state assessments are not administered, at least 50 percent of the growth measurement would come from research-based growth measures or alternative assessments.

The portion of teacher evaluation not related to student growth would come from the new evaluation tool each district or charter school chooses.

All teachers will be assigned an effectiveness rating of highly effective, effective, minimally effective or ineffective.

A teacher rating ineffective on three consecutive evaluations must be fired under the new law.

Similar provisions will apply to school administrators.

State Must Do Better To Get More People In College, Panel Told

For several years, officials have argued more Michigan residents need to attend college to help the economy, but at a committee hearing on Thursday, education and college officials said more also needs to be done to encourage students to attend college to help prevent the possibility of declining enrollment at universities.

The main message remains the need for higher education to help improve the economy. State Board of Education President John Austin (D-Ann Arbor) said that by 2025, the state will need 490,000 more students than current trends forecast who have at least an associate's degree or workplace certification. The state will also need 231,000 more people with at least a bachelor's degree than trends forecast to keep the economy chugging.

But the state also faces demographic factors that indicate the number of traditional high school students will not increase over the years, members of the House Higher Education and Community Colleges Appropriations Subcommittees were told.

Eric Guthrie, Michigan's demographer, said the state, like the rest of the nation, is getting older.

But Michigan is getting older a little faster than the rest of the U.S. The median age of Michigan's population is now 39.6, while nationally the median age is 37.7, he said.

Mr. Guthrie also said total college enrollment, in both universities and community colleges, tends to increase when the economy is bad. Individuals needing work will often attend college to update and improve their skills.

As the economy has improved, the total enrollment in Michigan's community colleges has declined. In 2010, there were approximately 200,000 community college students, and that number has fallen to about 160,000. But Mike Hansen, president of the Michigan Community College Association, said the current enrollment is still at the level it was in 2008, and enrollment has grown significantly at the state's community colleges over the last 15 years.

Guarding against enrollment decline, Susan Borego, chancellor at the University of Michigan-Flint, said the state must continue to attract international students and students from other states, but it must do a better job of getting more Michigan elementary and secondary students to be ready both academically and emotionally to attend college.

The state must "double down" on those efforts, she said, which means getting students into a mindset of going to college very early, as research shows that as early as the third grade students begin thinking about attending college.

Now, just 18 percent of 9th grade students in Michigan anticipate attending college; in Massachusetts - the state with the highest number - it is 30 percent, she said.

While more has to be done to encourage students to attend college, Ms. Borego also said efforts have to continue to have students academically ready for college. Just 1 percent of Flint High School students are ready for college, she said.

Efforts to boost academic preparedness were also discussed by Mr. Austin. Schools have to be able to determine early enough if students will need remediation classes to be college ready, he said.

Mr. Austin also stressed that additional student aid to make college affordable and simplified rules to make it easier for students to get aid is needed.

House Panel Urges Reversal At Veterans Homes

The Department of Military and Veterans Affairs is moving toward having fewer people in each room at its veterans homes, but members of the House Appropriations Military and Veterans Affairs Subcommittee said the move was wrong-headed.

A leader for the union at the Grand Rapids Home for Veterans also questioned the motives behind the move.

Jim Dunn, deputy director of the Veterans Affairs Agency, which oversees the homes within the department, said the move from four residents per room to two was an effort to bring the homes up to current standards for veteran care.

Mr. Dunn said the Grand Rapids home would not likely meet that standard. "We'll probably never get to one person rooms because of the layout," he said. But he expected to be able to drop the occupancy to two per room.

And he said plans for the currently vacant fourth floor of the Grand Rapids campus main building was a "neighborhood" design where residents would have access to all their needs, including cooking space, on the floor.

Mr. Dunn said the remodel was expected to cost about $3 million, but he also expected to be able to continue the practice of getting federal matching funds to cover much of the costs.

He said the program so far is able to live within its budget and would only be coming back to the state for more General Fund if it is not able to keep its occupied bed count at the levels projected when the budget was adopted. Part of the budget is a per diem from the federal government that drops if occupancy drops too far, he said.

But committee members said the program was going in the wrong direction in trying to reduce number of occupants per room.

"My experience in the medical profession, often we isolate people into a room by themselves and that often is not healthy either," Rep. Edward Canfield (R-Sebewaing) said. "I'm not suggesting that you abandon your plan, but I'm suggesting you reevaluate."

While he agreed on the need for some of the improvements Mr. Dunn had discussed - like new boilers to replace those that had failed - he cautioned against renovations that could impinge on the facilities' ability to serve as many veterans as possible.

"The important thing is to take care of people, not have a nice place to take care of people that's state of the art," he said.

Rep. Larry Inman (R-Williamsburg), chair of the subcommittee, said his father had initially been in a private room in his nursing home but was moved to a shared room.

"That ended up being a real blessing for my father because suddenly he had somebody he could talk to," Mr. Inman said. "To sit in a room alone is a lonely experience."

Rep. Philip Potvin was vehemently against the plan.

"You're really self-destructing that facility by going from a four-bed room to a one-bed room," Mr. Potvin said. "Our goal here is to take care of as many vets as possible."

Mr. Potvin also argued that many of the younger veterans coming back from the Middle East are suffering ailments, physical and mental, that would not allow them to care for themselves as the proposed renovations would envision.

He said the facilities could risk losing state support if they move ahead with the plans.

Mr. Inman tried to dial back the discussion near the end of the meeting.

"We have deep feelings on a number of issues," he said. "No one representative can tell a department head what to do. It takes the full body of the Legislature to give the department a directive."

While he directed his comments to the whole subcommittee, Mr. Potvin was the sole member remaining at the time.

Mr. Potvin also agreed with Rep. Henry Yanez (D-Sterling Heights) that the subcommittee needed a separate hearing on a recent audit by the state and inspection by the federal government.

Mr. Yanez particularly chastised the agency for security at the Grand Rapids facility.

"I and Rep. Miller went to visit facility," he said, referring to Rep. Derek Miller (D-Warren). "We went in a side door. We even escorted a vet to his physical therapy appointment. We were never challenged once."

To references of pulling state support for the homes, Mr. Dunn noted that the federal assistance helping to run and repair the facilities flows only to state homes, not to private facilities.

Mark Williams, president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees local that represents practical nurses in the facility (and a former worker laid off when the facility moved to a private contractor for direct care workers), said the proposed renovations are designed in part to reduce the capacity of the home to fall in line with staffing ability while keeping federal funds flowing.

Mr. Dunn said both homes exceeded the care hours required by federal standards. The homes must provide at least 2.5 hours of nursing care daily for each resident, and he said the Grand Rapids home was at 2.9 hours.

Mr. Williams argued that came from counting staff as direct care workers who should not be. He said the facility is also regularly under-staffed, sometimes with more staff absent than present.

"They knew they couldn't staff the home as a 755-bed facility," he said. "We needed to reduce the population of the facility."

He said he would provide documentation on the staffing shortfalls at a future meeting.

Poll: Carson Beats Democrats, Democrats Beat Trump

Michigan native Ben Carson, running for the 2016 Republican presidential nominee, would top both the two leading Democrats for president in the state, a poll released Thursday showed.

However, both Democrats - former U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont - would beat Donald Trump in Michigan, the same poll showed.

The poll was conducted by Lansing-based EPIC-MRA of 600 likely voters in the state between October 25 and October 31. The poll has an error rate of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

The poll showed slightly more of those asked identified as Democrat than Republican or independent (40 percent compared to 36 percent and 20 percent, respectively). Most of those people (52 percent) believed women should have the right to an abortion, and by one percentage point - 48 percent to 47 percent - approved of President Barack Obama's job performance.

However, the poll also showed 35 percent of respondents considered themselves conservative, 34 percent considered themselves moderate and 21 percent saw themselves as liberal.

Asked to choose between Mr. Carson - a retired neuro-surgeon who has gained notice for his soft-spoken approach and open embrace of religion - or Ms. Clinton or Mr. Sanders, the poll found Michigan voters leaned toward Mr. Carson. He won a plurality of voters against each.

Against Ms. Clinton, Mr. Carson was favored by 46 percent of those asked. Another 40 percent backed Ms. Clinton, while 14 percent were unsure.

Mr. Carson did even better against Mr. Sanders, though his support did not match that against Ms. Clinton. A total of 45 percent backed Mr. Carson to 36 percent support for Mr. Sanders. The remaining 19 percent were unsure.

However, both Democrats were favored over business-executive and promoter Donald Trump. Again, though, they lead Mr. Trump with a plurality, not a majority.

If Mr. Trump were the nominee against Ms. Clinton, she would poll 46 percent to his 38 percent, with 16 percent undecided.

Against Mr. Sanders, the Vermont senator polled 48 percent support to Mr. Trump's 36 percent, with again 16 percent unsure.

Sex Offenders Registration Act Revised Per Court Case

After the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan held that several provisions of the Sex Offenders Registration Act were unconstitutional in a case at the end of March, Sen.

Rick Jones drafted legislation to clarify language in the statute that cleared the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously Thursday.

In short, the plaintiffs in the case were six Michigan residents required by SORA to register as sex offenders and comply with the act for life, but they argued portions of the act violated the Due Process Clause because certain provisions are vague, interfere with the registrants' fundamental right to engage in common occupations of life, and infringe on their right to direct the education and upbringing of children, a Senate Fiscal Agency analysis of SB 581 indicates.

The bill revises the prohibition against a sex offender registrant's loitering near a school to indicate that a parent or guardian would not be loitering if he or she was on school property to transport his or her child to or from school or a school event; attending an event sanctioned by his or her child's school; or meeting with a school employee regarding his or her child enrolled at that school.

The bill also defines loitering to remain for a period of time, whether or not in a vehicle, with the intent to engage or solicit another person to engage in an act prohibited by a listed offense involving a minor for which registration is required under the act.

"School safety zone" is also redefined to mean school property and the area that lies 1,000 feet or less from the property line of school property. And "school property" is redefined as a building, playing field, or other property used for school purposes to impart instruction to children or used for functions and events sponsored by a school that is clearly marked and identified as a school property.

The bill also revises information a registrant is required to provide, including information that must be reported immediately and in person; and it revises information that must be included in the law enforcement database of registrations and the publicly available website maintained by the Department of State Police.

Finally, the bill revises provisions dealing with a waiver of initial and annual registration fees for a registrant who is indigent (in which case the fee must be waived until the first reporting month in which he or she was no longer indigent, under the bill).

"It is important to clarify the law so that we are protecting our children and still meeting the federal guidelines," Mr. Jones (R-Grand Ledge) said of his bill, in a statement.

A substitute was adopted to the bill and sent to the full Senate for consideration.

MINOR PRESCRIPTION DRUG EXEMPTION: The committee also reported without substitute HB 4843 exempting a person under 21 years of age from prohibitions against possessing and using certain prescription drugs if he or she sought medical assistance or accompanied another person who sought assistance for a drug overdose or other perceived medical emergency.

The exemption would not, under the bill, prevent investigation and prosecution of a person for any other violation, or be grounds for suppression of evidence in the prosecution of other criminal charges.

And the bill requires a health facility or agency to develop a process for notifying the parent, guardian or custodian of a minor under the age of 18 who sought or was presented for emergency medical treatment for a drug overdose or other perceived medical emergency.

"It is my hope this bill help reduce the number of deaths among young people and encourage youth to do the right thing (as necessary)," Rep. Al Pscholka (R-Stevensville), sponsor of the bill, told the committee. "We shouldn't be afraid to save a life."

Snyder Expands Pipeline Board

Governor Rick Snyder issued an executive order Thursday adding a tribal government representative to the Pipeline Safety Advisory Board.

With the new order (EO 2015-14), Mr. Snyder appointed Homer Mandoka, chair of the Nottawaseppi Huron Band of the Potawatomi, to the board.

"Michigan's tribal governments play a vital role in the preservation of our state's world-class resources," Mr. Snyder said in a statement. "I am confident Chairman Mandoka's passion and work ethic will be an asset to the board and I thank him for his willingness to help ensure our lakes, streams and rivers are protected for years to come."

Mr. Mandoka, of Bronson, becomes the 16th member of the board.

PSC Eliminates DTE Electric's Renewable Energy Surcharge

As has been the case with numerous other utilities that had imposed a surcharge upon their customers to pay for their renewable energy investments as mandated by the 2008 energy law, the Public Service Commission on Thursday approved a settlement agreement amending DTE Electric Company's renewable energy plan to eliminate the utility's energy surcharge of 43 cents per meter per month, effective January 1, 2016.

"The falling cost of wind-generated energy has prompted DTE to eliminate its renewable energy surcharge," PSC Chair John Quackenbush said in a statement about the settlement (case U-17793). "DTE joins Consumers Energy, which eliminated the renewable energy surcharge last year. More Michigan customers will see the tangible benefits of lower renewable energy costs on their bills."

In a separate case, the PSC approved a settlement agreement reconciling DTE Electric Company's 2014 energy optimization plan expenses, resulting in an increase of 29 cents on the monthly bills of residential customers using 500 kilowatt-hours of electricity a month, effective January 1, 2016 (case U-17832).

CLOVERLAND ELECTRIC BECOMES MEMBER-REGULATED: The PSC also directed Cloverland Electric Cooperative to make certain filings and to meet with PSC staff as it transitions to a member-regulated cooperative effective January 19, 2016. It will become the eighth electric cooperative to do so since the new law became effective, the PSC said (case U-17971).

INDIANA MICHIGAN POWER COMPANY DECREASE: The PSC also approved a settlement agreement reconciling Indiana Michigan Power Company's 2014 energy optimization plan expenses, resulting in a decrease of 21 cents on the monthly bills of residential customers using 500 kilowatt-hours of electricity effective with the next billing cycle (case U-17833).

Volume #54, Report #222 -- Monday, November 9, 2015

Senate Panel To Vote On Eliminating Straight-Ticket Voting

A bill that would eliminate straight-ticket voting is set for a committee hearing on Tuesday in the Senate Elections and Government Reform Committee, and the chair of the committee expects the bill will head to the full Senate floor.

Michigan general election ballots allow voters, if they wish, to vote for a party's entire slate of candidates with a single mark instead of having to individually select each candidate for partisan office.

"I think there is merit to having individuals observe the choice on the ballot between one party and another. The overwhelming majority of states in nation have eliminated straight ticket," Sen. Dave Robertson (R-Grand Blanc), chair of the committee, said Monday. "Michigan is one of only a small handful (of states) that has straight-ticket voting."

The last attempt to end straight-ticket voting came in 2001, but voters repealed the law in the 2002 election after Democrats gathered enough signatures to put the legislation up for referendum. There has been no serious attempt to eliminate straight-ticket voting in Michigan since, but the straight-ticket option has long been seen as helping Democrats more because more of their voters vote a straight ballot.

Sen. Marty Knollenberg (R-Troy) is the lead sponsor on the bill, SB 13, among the first 20 bills introduced when the Senate re-convened for its new session in January (See Gongwer Michigan Report, January 20, 2015). Mr. Knollenberg did not return a request for comment on the legislation.

"He feels very strongly about the issue and I find it has merit as well," Mr. Robertson said of Mr. Knollenberg. "I think certainly it's something that has been discussed for some time. It's been attempted on some other occasions, (and) I'm happy to support it."

The committee is set to meet at 9 a.m. in room 110 of the Farnum Building.

OAKLAND COUNTY EXECUTIVE: SB 110, a bill by Mr. Robertson to change the election of county executive in a county government to gubernatorial election years, is also slated for final passage in the Senate, a tentative session agenda released Monday indicated. The bill was reported from committee in early June and has Democrats on watch (See Gongwer Michigan Report, June 5, 2015).

UNION LEAVE TIME: Also expected to see final passage is a pair of bills, SB 279 and SB 280, to disallow paid leave time for union officials of state and local government unions as they conduct contract negotiations. The bills were reported from committee in mid-June (See Gongwer Michigan Report, June 16, 2015).

Casperson Announces For Congress

Sen. Tom Casperson confirmed Monday what has been expected: he is running for the 1st U.S. House District.

Mr. Casperson (R-Escanaba) is the first Republican officially announced to succeed retiring U.S. Rep. Dan Benishek (R-Crystal Falls). And this would be his second attempt at the seat, having lost to then-U.S. Rep. Bart Stupak in 2008.

He said he would bring Upper Peninsula sensibilities to Washington.

"Way too often it seems that Washington, D.C., is where common sense goes to die," Mr. Casperson said in the statement announcing his candidacy. "Unaccountable bureaucrats, unresponsive government agencies, regulations, restrictions and taxes. Here in the 1st District, we've seen all that and more, and more often than most other places.

"I'm running for Congress because it's time we make Washington listen to us. I'm running to bring our values, our common sense and our voice to our nation's Capital," he said.

He said he also has the elective office experience needed for the post. Mr. Casperson would be forgoing his final two years in the Senate if he wins the seat. He moved to the Senate after serving six years in the House.

Rep. Peter Pettalia (R-Presque Isle), who has been considering a run for the seat, said Mr. Casperson's announcement was not a surprise and would not affect his own decision or timeline.

"We are still evaluating the challenges of running for Congress," he said.

Mr. Pettalia said he has been traversing the district seeking support and would announce "shortly" whether he has enough. As to how long shortly is, he said, "I don't want to box myself into that."

Military and Veterans Affairs Deputy Director Jason Allen, a former senator from the region and another potential Republican candidate, did not return calls Monday.

Mr. Casperson, one of the Legislature's best retail campaigners whom many Republican consultants see as the party's best choice to win what will be a competitive race against the Democratic nominee, immediately faced fire from the right and the left.

Democrats were quick to strike out at Mr. Casperson's campaign, dubbing him "Tom Taxperson".

"This morning, Tom Casperson, who just voted to punish seniors and working families with higher prices at the pump and a new 'birthday tax' on the vehicles they drive, announced he's running for Congress," Michigan Democratic Party Chair Brandon Dillon said in a statement. "Time and again, Casperson has put corporate special interests and the wealthy above families that struggle to make ends meet. With his latest vote to hurt and tax seniors and working families, voters in the 1st Congressional District will no doubt reject Tom 'the Taxperson' Casperson."

But Republicans with a more conservative bent than Mr. Casperson - who besides supporting the road funding package also backed Medicaid expansion - hope to deny him the GOP nomination. Scott Hagerstrom, head of a new group, Tax-Hiking Republicans, slammed Mr. Casperson for his voting record in the Legislature.

"Tom Casperson supported Medicaid expansion, the largest tax hike in the last 50 years with Proposal 1, and raising the gas tax 15 cents," Mr. Hagerstrom said. "We don't need tax-hiking Republicans in Congress like Tom Casperson. We need true conservatives to represent us."

State Report: Gas Tax Revenue Down More Than $100M Since Peak

Michigan's gas tax revenues totaled $820.6 million in fiscal year 2013-14, down more than $120 million since their peak more than a decade before, a report by the Department of Treasury shows.

During the same time frame, total gasoline usage is down more than 600,000 gallons annually.

And what is now the state's largest transportation-based revenue source, the registration tax, collected $940.6 million. While that figure is $120 million more than the fuel tax raised, it is also just slightly more than the amount the tax raised approximately a decade ago.

The report was issued before the Legislature last week approved a package that will ultimately increase both the fuel and registration taxes to add $600 million in revenues to road and transportation funding. The package also calls for some $600 million to come from the General Fund for transportation funding. The tax and spending changes in the package would not start until at least 2017.

The report did not have figures for the 2014-15 fiscal year.

But the report did point out that at the current 19 cents a gallon, Michigan's gasoline tax puts the state at 37th compared to all states for their gasoline taxes. Connecticut has the highest gasoline tax at 46.8 cents. Alaska has the lowest gasoline tax at eight cents a gallon.

Michigan is also one of a number of states that charges a sales tax on gasoline sales. Combined with the gasoline tax, the report said the state would average 37 cents a gallon on gasoline, ranking it as the 10th highest state for total gasoline taxes.

The report also shows that Michigan is the largest state by population to not have any toll roads. In all, 29 states have toll roads.

And of the $3.5 billion in transportation funds raised in the 2013-14 fiscal year (which included bond sales), more than $1.3 billion came from federal funds.

Local governments received $1.4 billion, or 42 percent of the funds raised, in transfers.

In terms of the gas tax, the peak for funds raised came in the 2001-02 fiscal year, when the tax raised $938.9 million. In fact, since the gas tax was last increased in 1997, the report said gas tax revenues have declined by 0.6 percent a year on average.

Sharp increases in the cost of gasoline and oil, brought on by more expensive production and particularly economic competition from other nations - the biggest competitor being China - has helped drive down total fuel consumption.

Gas consumption hit its peak in 2003, with more than 5.049 billion gallons used in Michigan. At the time, the average price per gallon was $1.55, the report said. By 2014, total consumption was 4.43 billion, with an average price of $3.53 a gallon.

In late 2014, oil prices began to slide and for more than a year gasoline has sold for close to an average of $2.50 a gallon. The report had no data, however, on how that may have affected consumption in Michigan.

Reduced fuel consumption is also a product of improved fuel efficiency in cars and light trucks. In 2014, both domestic and imported models of cars averaged more than 36 miles a gallon. A decade ago, both domestic and imported models averaged less than 30 miles a gallon.

In terms of the registration tax, a major shift the state made in 1983 - to base vehicle registration fees on a vehicle's value instead its weight - played a major role in how the state's tax has grown in collections. That is particularly true given how vehicles have become lighter to improve mileage.

The report showed that the current registration tax for a Ford Focus SE is $106 and for a Cadillac CTS it is $211. If both vehicles were taxed on their weight, they would be charged $29 and $37 respectively.

Schuette: Ads Lie About Environmental Record

Attorney General Bill Schuette said television advertisements that began running over the weekend are designed to cow him and other attorneys general into dropping a challenge to new federal power plant emissions standards, but he said the plan won't work.

Mr. Schuette said he had no plan to drop the challenge to the Clean Energy Plan developed by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to reduce carbon emissions from power plants.

"This is an effort to intimidate attorneys general not to enforce the law, not to push back," he said.

He said attorneys general had already succeeded against EPA overreach and he expected they would again.

"It's a question are you following the provisions of the Clean Air Act, and they're not being followed," he said.

He said he was one of four attorneys general targeted in ads by Independence USA PAC because of his leadership on efforts to rein in government.

"Big government is on the march ... and I've been leading the fight against the Obama administration," he said.

He noted he would begin November 16 as chair of the Republican Attorneys General Association, where he would be involved both with development of policy and with trying to get more Republicans elected as their state's top attorney.

"We've grown our ranks across the country," he said. "The majority of the attorneys general across the country are Republican."

But he said his media event to counter the ads was not driven by politics (as he is widely believed to be running for governor in 2018 when Governor Rick Snyder cannot seek re-election due to term limits).

"If someone makes a false, nonsensical accusation, I respond," he said, adding, "These ads are just nonsense. I have a very strong record on the environment."

He noted his efforts on Asian carp, the settlement against Enbridge for the Kalamazoo River oil spill and the agreement to prevent tar sands oil from flowing through a pipeline under the Straits of Mackinac.

He said there was no conflict in his efforts to fight the rule and the Department of Environmental Quality's rules that would impose similar emissions standards on power plants.

"You can do more than two things at once in America today," he said.

House, Senate Dems Seek To Change Campaign Finance Law

Two House Democrats announced Monday they would be joining forces with colleagues in the Senate to try to pass a series of bills they say would increase transparency in state government.

The same day, the Center for Public Integrity announced Michigan had placed dead last among all 50 states for its State Integrity Investigation ranking of state transparency and accountability.

"Our lobby law is so weak that it is nearly impossible to determine which companies are spending millions of dollars to influence our elections," Rep. Jon Hoadley (D-Kalamazoo) said at a news conference Monday with Rep. Vanessa Guerra (D-Saginaw).

He pointed to the report released Monday, as well as a recent one that found the Michigan Supreme Court election campaign in 2014 was "the most expensive and least transparent in the nation" in terms of judicial elections, Mr. Hoadley said.

Overall, the legislation seeks to require super political action committees to disclose information of donors and for the state to lower its contribution limits back to pre-2013 levels.

The legislation would also require all late filing fees to be paid by the candidate, not through committee funds, as well as require monthly campaign finance reports and doubling all penalties for late filing by elected officials. It would also establish uniform campaign finance reporting dates for all committees.

"In changing the nature of reporting, we'll make it so people can see real-time the effect that last-minute money can make," Ms. Guerra said.

Mr. Hoadley admits there is "no one solution that's going to solve all the money in politics," which is why Democrats are attempting a more comprehensive approach, he said.

CPI REPORT: And the report released Monday by the Center for Public Integrity underscores the need for such legislation, Mr. Hoadley noted.

The report places Michigan at the bottom of all states in terms of government transparency and accountability laws and practices. It received an F in 10 of the 13 categories of government operations that were examined: political financing, executive accountability, legislative accountability, judicial accountability, state civil service management, procurement, lobbying disclosure, ethics enforcement agencies and state pension fund management.

What appeared to hurt Michigan most severely are its comparatively weak Freedom of Information Act, which does not apply to the governor's office, Legislature or judiciary; lack of any personal financial disclosure for elected officials and candidates for office; relatively toothless campaign finance act; and a weak law on lobbying expense disclosure.

Michigan received a similar overall score and letter grade of an F with the first State Integrity report was released in 2012, but it ranked 44th at that time. But the CPI notes the two scores are not directly comparable due to changes made to improve and update the project and its methodology.

However, Michigan received a B- and 5th place ranking for its electoral oversight, though, and B+ (8th place) for state budget processes. It also received a C+ (ranked 32nd) for internal auditing.

The best grade in the nation went to Alaska, who had earned a C, the CPI noted. Only two others earned better than a D+ -- California and Connecticut - and 11 states total receiving failing grades.

The State Integrity Investigation also found that in two-thirds of all states, ethics agencies or committees routinely fail to initiate investigations or impose sanctions when necessary, often because they're unable to do so without first receiving a complaint. Michigan received a score of 25, because based on the cases it has handled, the ethics commission responds to complaints and does not initiate investigations either.

And Michigan is not among the nine states that have adopted open data measures, according to the Sunlight Foundation. Some of those open data measures, though, do little more than create an advisory panel to study the issue.

DEQ Launches Video To Update Flint Water Testing Results

Freeman Elementary School in Flint has some fixtures where lead levels were high, but most of the building had safe water, Department of Environmental Quality officials said in a video released Monday by the department.

State officials tested 31 faucets and drinking fountains in the school and found nine with lead levels above the 15 parts per billion that requires remediation, George Krisztian, Flint Action Plan coordinator, said in the video.

"What our testing showed was that it was clearly fixture-specific," Mr. Krisztian said.

The state is recommending that the school turn off water to those nine faucets, flush the faucets every morning before students arrive, or replace them.

The video said the state has also tested more than 300 water samples from residences and businesses since the beginning of October, with less than 10 percent of those showing lead levels exceeding safe drinking standards.

"The homeowner data that we've looked at so far closely parallels the data that we've been finding in the schools in that we've been able to determine that this is very much a site-specific issue," Mr. Krisztian said.

He urged residents to test their water to determine whether they have lead concerns.

MIChild Becomes Medicaid Expansion Program

Officially on January 1, Michigan's MIChild program to provide health insurance through Medicaid to the children of lower income households will be considered a Medicaid expansion program, the Department of Health and Human Services said on Monday.

The change should mean no practical change in children's coverage, the department said in its notice, although all children getting dental services would now get them through Delta Dental Plans (some children were receiving the benefits through Golden Dental).

The state did not say whether as an expansion plan MIChild would be considered in the same class as the Healthy Michigan plan. MIChild would not be subjected to the same federal waiver requirement as Healthy Michigan (although DHHS officials have requested a waiver from the federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services to reflect that, beginning in the 2015-016 fiscal year, children in all 83 counties are eligible for dental coverage).

The program will continue to be called MIChild, the state said.

And recipients should be able to get access to even more benefits, the state said.

Some recipients will have to switch their current plans, which could also mean a change in providers. Recipients will need to choose a plan certified by the state and located in their geographic region.

The state is changing some plans that will be eligible to provide coverage to regular Medicaid recipients as part of its new contract that takes effect in January. A number of the plans left out of the decision by the state are challenging those actions before the Administrative Board.

Letters to all recipients explaining the changes will be issued, the department said in its announcement.

Virtual Tour Of Capitol Debuts

A virtual tour of the Capitol is now available.

A project of the Michigan State Capitol Commission, the tour enables users to traverse the halls of the Capitol, get a peek inside the House and Senate chambers and even learn about the many portraits and other artwork adorning the Capitol walls.

Part of the idea behind the virtual tour is to give student groups a chance to prepare in advance for their trips to the Capitol.

Capital Notebook: Poll Shows Opposition To Guns In Schools

A poll commissioned by the Michigan Coalition to End Gun Violence shows overwhelming opposition to letting those with concealed pistol licenses carry a firearm onto an educational campus, whether the person is carrying concealed or openly.

Now pending before the Senate is SB 442, which would end the ability for those with concealed pistol licenses to openly carry a firearm into an area now designated otherwise off-limits to firearms and instead allow those license-holders to carry a concealed firearm. Besides schools, gun-free zones include hospitals, houses of religious worship, entertainment and sports venues and child day care centers.

According to the survey conducted by EPIC/MRA, 69 percent of those polled said they oppose allowing license-holders to open carry on school property with just 27 percent in support. Fifty-seven percent oppose allowing CPL-holders to carry concealed onto school property with 39 percent in support.

And 53 percent said they agreed with the view that schools should have the right to prohibit firearms on their property and is not a diminishment of the right bear arms while 40 percent said the U.S. Constitution ensures the right to carry a firearm onto school property.

The survey was conducted October 25-31 among 600 active and likely general election voters. The error margin was plus or minus four percentage points.

TARVER TO HEAD REPUBLICAN WOMEN'S FEDERATION OF MICHIGAN: Republican activist Linda Lee Tarver has been elected president of the Republican Women's Federation of Michigan.

BEAR REGULATIONS: The Department of Natural Resources announced Monday that it was beginning the process to develop bear hunting regulations expected to be in place for the 2017 hunting season.

The department's Bear Forum, a 17-member group made up of bear hunters, agricultural interests and the U.S. Forest Service, has scheduled a public meeting at 10 a.m. December 9 at Little Bear East Arena, 275 Marquette Street, St. Ignace.

The group will use the public comment collected at the meeting to draft recommendations to the Natural Resources Commission, which has the ultimate authority over hunting regulations.

EPA AWARDS NEARLY $20M TO CLINTON RIVER PROJECTS IN SOUTHEAST MICHIGAN: The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has awarded new funding for major Great Lakes Restoration Initiative Projects in the Clinton River Area of Concern totaling nearly $20 million, the agency announced Monday.

Once completed, the projects announced Monday will move the Clinton River Area of Concern toward a more vibrant environment and local economy, Senior Advisor to the EPA Administrator Cameron Davis said in a statement.

"Our lakes and rivers are part of who we are and our way of life," U.S. Senator Debbie Stabenow, co-chair of the Great Lakes Task Force, said in a statement. "Investing in the Clinton River watershed is critical to the health and conservation of our waterways and wildlife habitats. This support for our counties, townships and cities will help keep our waters clean and healthy for generations to come."

Campaign Notes

COLLEEN CARL FORMALLY ANNOUNCES IN 33RD HOUSE: Republican Colleen Carl has officially declared she is running for the 33rd House District in Macomb County. Ms. Carl, who runs a private children's music education business and is a Republican activist, is the daughter of former Sen. Doug Carl. The current seat-holder, Rep. Ken Goike (R-Ray Township), cannot seek re-election to the seat because of term limits.

@PAYTAXESMELISSA: Republicans over the weekend launched a Twitter account to call out Melissa Gilbert, Democratic candidate for the 8th U.S. House District and actress, for unpaid taxes.

Ms. Gilbert has said she has an installment plan to repay the $360,551 in federal income taxes owed for 2011 through 2013.

As of Monday, "Melissa Gilbert should pay her taxes @gilberformi" was the sole post to the new account.

CLEMENTS ENDORSEMENTS: The Sierra Club has announced its endorsement of Democrat Paul Clements in his second attempt to unseat U.S. Rep. Fred Upton (R-St. Joseph).

Mr. Clements announced the endorsement in a brief fundraising email over the weekend.

SCHUETTE BULLISH ON BUSH: Despite flagging polls and little love from the pundits for his debate performances, Attorney General Bill Schuette said Monday he still expects Jeb Bush to be the Republican Party nominee for president.

Mr. Schuette said Mr. Bush is in about the same place for the 2016 election as Mitt Romney was for the 2012 election.

"This is all about stamina," Mr. Schuette said. "Jeb is the marathon man."

The key, he said, will be for Mr. Bush to ease away from some of his handlers' advice. "Just be yourself," he said has been his advice. "You have to just be direct."

He also said Mr. Bush's coming campaign stop in the state shows the importance of winning Michigan. "You don't come to the state just for a picnic," he said.

Of the current 16 Republican presidential candidates, Mr. Schuette said about 10 are viable, but he expected there would be about five left by the time Michigan's primary comes in March.

TAX-HIKING REPUBLICANS: Scott Hagerstrom, former head of Americans for Prosperity Michigan, announced a new effort Monday to call out Republicans who have voted for tax increases.

The new federal campaign committee, Tax-Hiking Republicans, will be based in Michigan and its first effort will be to prevent Sen. Tom Casperson (R-Escanaba) from being nominated in the 1st U.S. House District.

"We're holding the fire to the feet of Republicans," Mr. Hagerstrom told Gongwer News Service of the purpose of the new fund.

Mr. Hagerstrom said Mr. Casperson was a logical first target because he had supported the Medicaid expansion and several efforts to increase fuel taxes. "He was a perfect person to be first to attack," Mr. Hagerstrom said. "We'll see how this goes and we'll look at others down the road."

He declined to indicate, prior to filing campaign finance reports, who was financing the new committee.

Water filters available for MDHHS clients, all Flint residents beginning Tuesday

LANSING, Mich. – Free water filters will be available to current Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients and Flint residents at four locations beginning Tuesday, October 6, at 9 a.m. through a partnership between the MDHHS and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. Free National Sanitation Foundation certified water filters are being provided to Flint residents as part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area.

Current MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location to obtain a free, certified home water filter. Residents who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department offices located at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw in Flint. Staff will be onsite at all four locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

"Ensuring that families in the Flint area have access to resources that will help reduce the potential for lead exposure is our top priority," said Nick Lyon, director of the MDHHS. "I want to thank our partners who have mobilized to make water filters available – a point that highlights the importance of continued collaboration at the local, state and federal level as we move forward."

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active Family Independence Program (FIP), Food Assistance Program (FAP), Child Development and Care (CDC), State Disability Assistance (SDA), or Social Security Insurance (SSI) recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office to receive their filter free of charge. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their water bill to the GCCARD location.

Although blood lead levels throughout the city of Flint have remained steady, last week, MDHHS data was found to be consistent with a recent Hurley Children's Hospital study indicating increased blood lead levels in children residing in two Flint ZIP codes after a 2014 change in water source. While lead paint remains the number one cause of lead poisoning in Michigan, the recent data prompted MDHHS to take action to reduce potential lead exposures through water sources.

MDHHS is urging parents in Flint and throughout the state to do their part in preventing elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information about steps you can take now, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and available resources, visit www.michigang.gov/flintwater.

Updated summary report on Flint blood lead level data now available

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its bi-weekly summary report on lead testing in Flint. Preliminary data indicate that 43 of 2,182 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"In partnership with the Genesee County Health Department, we are working to engage and provide resources to residents to reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "Case management and home lead analysis are available for families in which an elevated blood lead level has been detected."

The first MDHHS summary report on blood lead levels in Flint was issued Dec. 3, 2015. Updated reports are posted on a bi-weekly basis on the www.michigan.gov/flintwater website. After refining our methods to identify age, some people are now counted in a different age group than on previous reports. The total counts for each year have not changed.

The report includes both capillary and venous blood tests, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS, together with the Genesee County Health Department (GCHD), is working with local partners to distribute educational information around lead testing and prevention. Supplemental state dollars are funding GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected.

Families with an elevated blood lead level can also choose to have a nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to help identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources. Families with questions about their blood lead levels or test results are also encouraged to contact their primary care physician or local health department.

In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities to recommend blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Water filters available for MDHHS clients, all Flint residents beginning Tuesday

LANSING, Mich. – Free water filters will be available to current Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients and Flint residents at four locations beginning Tuesday, October 6, at 9 a.m. through a partnership between the MDHHS and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. Free National Sanitation Foundation certified water filters are being provided to Flint residents as part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area.

Current MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location to obtain a free, certified home water filter. Residents who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department offices located at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw in Flint. Staff will be onsite at all four locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

“Ensuring that families in the Flint area have access to resources that will help reduce the potential for lead exposure is our top priority,” said Nick Lyon, director of the MDHHS. “I want to thank our partners who have mobilized to make water filters available – a point that highlights the importance of continued collaboration at the local, state and federal level as we move forward.”

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active Family Independence Program (FIP), Food Assistance Program (FAP), Child Development and Care (CDC), State Disability Assistance (SDA), or Social Security Insurance (SSI) recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office to receive their filter free of charge. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their water bill to the GCCARD location.

Although blood lead levels throughout the city of Flint have remained steady, last week, MDHHS data was found to be consistent with a recent Hurley Children’s Hospital study indicating increased blood lead levels in children residing in two Flint ZIP codes after a 2014 change in water source. While lead paint remains the number one cause of lead poisoning in Michigan, the recent data prompted MDHHS to take action to reduce potential lead exposures through water sources.

MDHHS is urging parents in Flint and throughout the state to do their part in preventing elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information about steps you can take now, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and available resources, visit www.michigang.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest data outlining blood lead levels in Flint

Follow-up care, case management resources continue for families

LANSING, Mich. – Preliminary data indicates that 30 of 1,361 adults and children tested in Flint since October 1 had elevated blood lead levels, according to a report issued today by the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services.

This marks the first summary report on lead testing called for in the state's action plan related to health concerns about Flint's water infrastructure.

"Our goal is to help families reduce their exposure to lead sources," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We have made progress in testing and identifying those with elevated blood lead levels, and the department will continue to work closely with the Genesee County Health Department to reach these families. We will remain diligent in our ongoing outreach and education efforts."

Information comes from tests administered citywide to 1,361 children and adults since October 1. Tests showed that 21 of 969 children age 17 or younger and 9 of 392 adults over the age 18 were identified with elevated blood lead levels.

The report covers test results reported to MDHHS since the state action plan was put in place Oct. 2. It includes the number of tests and number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter, and captures both capillary and venous blood tests that have been reported to MDHHS since the beginning of October. People who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Five micrograms per deciliter is the level that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention considers elevated and triggers health care professional follow up with families.

The full report is posted online at www.michigan.gov/flintwater and will be updated as more data becomes available.

When reviewing historical trend data, the risk of lead exposure is highest during the third quarter of each year – July through September. Seasonal variation is the result of a number of factors including increased exposure to lead in dust and soil in the summer months.

In the third quarter of 2010, 8.3 percent of Flint children 6 and under showed elevated blood lead levels. The figure gradually decreased to 4.1 percent in the third quarter of 2013. During the same months in 2014, the figure increased to 7.5 percent and decreased to 6.4 percent in the third quarter of 2015.

Last month, MDHHS collaborated with the county health department and local partners to distribute educational resources and informational letters to Flint parents regarding lead testing. The state is providing funding for GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level has been detected. During these follow-up visits, nurses coordinate with environmental health investigators to meet with families in their homes to identify lead exposures, address questions and provide water filters. People can be exposed to lead from paint, soil, plumbing and other sources.

MDHHS continues to provide free water filters and replacement cartridges to Flint residents at four locations, including the MDHHS Flint offices and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest round of Flint blood lead level data

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its newest summary report on lead testing in Flint. According to preliminary data, 39 of 1,836 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"As testing continues, our focus remains on helping families reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We are working closely with the Genesee County Health Department to provide information and offer tools in the community, and encourage families to explore the resources that are available to them."

Both capillary and venous blood tests are included in the report, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS is working closely with local partners to offer resources and distribute important lead testing and prevention information. Additional state funding has allowed for Genesee County Health Department (GCHD) nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected. These families can also choose to have the nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources.

To support these efforts, the state is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities on enhanced screening and testing. In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS has recommended blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are still available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Updated summary report on Flint blood lead level data now available

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its bi-weekly summary report on lead testing in Flint. Preliminary data indicate that 43 of 2,182 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"In partnership with the Genesee County Health Department, we are working to engage and provide resources to residents to reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "Case management and home lead analysis are available for families in which an elevated blood lead level has been detected."

The first MDHHS summary report on blood lead levels in Flint was issued Dec. 3, 2015. Updated reports are posted on a bi-weekly basis on the www.michigan.gov/flintwater website. After refining our methods to identify age, some people are now counted in a different age group than on previous reports. The total counts for each year have not changed.

The report includes both capillary and venous blood tests, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS, together with the Genesee County Health Department (GCHD), is working with local partners to distribute educational information around lead testing and prevention. Supplemental state dollars are funding GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected.

Families with an elevated blood lead level can also choose to have a nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to help identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources. Families with questions about their blood lead levels or test results are also encouraged to contact their primary care physician or local health department.

In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities to recommend blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest round of Flint blood lead level data

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its newest summary report on lead testing in Flint. According to preliminary data, 39 of 1,836 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"As testing continues, our focus remains on helping families reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We are working closely with the Genesee County Health Department to provide information and offer tools in the community, and encourage families to explore the resources that are available to them."

Both capillary and venous blood tests are included in the report, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS is working closely with local partners to offer resources and distribute important lead testing and prevention information. Additional state funding has allowed for Genesee County Health Department (GCHD) nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected. These families can also choose to have the nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources.

To support these efforts, the state is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities on enhanced screening and testing. In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS has recommended blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are still available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest data outlining blood lead levels in Flint

Follow-up care, case management resources continue for families

LANSING, Mich. – Preliminary data indicates that 30 of 1,361 adults and children tested in Flint since October 1 had elevated blood lead levels, according to a report issued today by the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services.

This marks the first summary report on lead testing called for in the state's action plan related to health concerns about Flint's water infrastructure.

"Our goal is to help families reduce their exposure to lead sources," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We have made progress in testing and identifying those with elevated blood lead levels, and the department will continue to work closely with the Genesee County Health Department to reach these families. We will remain diligent in our ongoing outreach and education efforts."

Information comes from tests administered citywide to 1,361 children and adults since October 1. Tests showed that 21 of 969 children age 17 or younger and 9 of 392 adults over the age 18 were identified with elevated blood lead levels.

The report covers test results reported to MDHHS since the state action plan was put in place Oct. 2. It includes the number of tests and number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter, and captures both capillary and venous blood tests that have been reported to MDHHS since the beginning of October. People who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Five micrograms per deciliter is the level that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention considers elevated and triggers health care professional follow up with families.

The full report is posted online at www.michigan.gov/flintwater and will be updated as more data becomes available.

When reviewing historical trend data, the risk of lead exposure is highest during the third quarter of each year – July through September. Seasonal variation is the result of a number of factors including increased exposure to lead in dust and soil in the summer months.

In the third quarter of 2010, 8.3 percent of Flint children 6 and under showed elevated blood lead levels. The figure gradually decreased to 4.1 percent in the third quarter of 2013. During the same months in 2014, the figure increased to 7.5 percent and decreased to 6.4 percent in the third quarter of 2015.

Last month, MDHHS collaborated with the county health department and local partners to distribute educational resources and informational letters to Flint parents regarding lead testing. The state is providing funding for GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level has been detected. During these follow-up visits, nurses coordinate with environmental health investigators to meet with families in their homes to identify lead exposures, address questions and provide water filters. People can be exposed to lead from paint, soil, plumbing and other sources.

MDHHS continues to provide free water filters and replacement cartridges to Flint residents at four locations, including the MDHHS Flint offices and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

State To Contribute $1M As Part Of Flint Water Fix

In the short term, Flint residents will have access to water filters, some purchased with state funds, and in the longer term the city will be improving its corrosion controls to keep lead out of water supplies, state and city officials said today in unveiling a plan to address recent water safety concerns in the city.

Moving Flint back to getting water from the Detroit Water and Sewerage System is also still on the table for both state and local officials, but will require negotiations, both sides said.

Both sides said the water itself is not the source of lead and the city will be working in the coming years to replace the lead service lines that are the source.

Environmental Quality Direct Dan Wyant acknowledged that testing shows increased lead levels in the water since the city moved from the Detroit system in 2014, but he argued the problem was the switch and not the water source. He said one of the state's efforts is to ensure the city has sufficient corrosion controls in place so when it switches sources again away from the Flint River, the problem does not recur.

Mr. Wyant said the state has continued quarterly testing of the city's water source and those tests have continued to show no lead.

Eden Wells, chief medical officer for the state, said blood tests for children in the city did not change after the water change, but she said tests of children in two high-risk ZIP codes did, as tests by Hurley Medical Center had shown earlier, show increased blood lead levels in those areas after the water change.

But she and others said it was still not confirmed that the water was the source of the additional lead exposure.

Flint Mayor Dayne Walling said the city was still considering switching back to Detroit water while efforts to finish an agreement with Karegnondi Water Authority are completed. But he said the switch would cost the city up to $2 million a month it does not have.

Mr. Wyant, asked if the state would cover those costs, said only that the state had committed $1 million already toward the problem but that Governor Rick Snyder had said he would be willing to mediate discussions between the city and the Detroit system.

Water filters available for MDHHS clients, all Flint residents beginning Tuesday

LANSING, Mich. – Free water filters will be available to current Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients and Flint residents at four locations beginning Tuesday, October 6, at 9 a.m. through a partnership between the MDHHS and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. Free National Sanitation Foundation certified water filters are being provided to Flint residents as part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area.

Current MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road

MDHHS office location to obtain a free, certified home water filter. Residents who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department offices located at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw in Flint. Staff will be onsite at all four locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

"Ensuring that families in the Flint area have access to resources that will help reduce the potential for lead exposure is our top priority," said Nick Lyon, director of the MDHHS. "I want to thank our partners who have mobilized to make water filters available – a point that highlights the importance of continued collaboration at the local, state and federal level as we move forward."

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active Family Independence Program (FIP), Food Assistance Program (FAP), Child Development and Care (CDC), State Disability Assistance (SDA), or Social Security Insurance (SSI) recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office to receive their filter free of charge. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their water bill to the GCCARD location.

Although blood lead levels throughout the city of Flint have remained steady, last week, MDHHS data was found to be consistent with a recent Hurley Children's Hospital study indicating increased blood lead levels in children residing in two Flint ZIP codes after a 2014 change in water source. While lead paint remains the number one cause of lead poisoning in Michigan, the recent data prompted MDHHS to take action to reduce potential lead exposures through water sources.

MDHHS is urging parents in Flint and throughout the state to do their part in preventing elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information about steps you can take now, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and available resources, visit www.michigang.gov/flintwater.

Flint, Genesee County Formally Request Emergency Assistance On Water

Declaring that the water crisis goes beyond the ability of local resources to resolve, the Genesee County Board of Commissioners agreed Monday with the Flint mayor's call to declare a state of emergency in the city.

The Flint Journal reported the request will seek more than $50 million to replace lead service lines and other yet to be determined needs.

Several residences and other facilities in Flint use water service lines made of lead. When the source of the city's water was switched from the Detroit system to the Flint River without corrosion control treatment, lead-based service lines began leaching lead into the water, resulting in lead levels beyond those when the federal government requires remediation. Blood samples showed elevated lead levels in many children.

The request will go through the Department of State Police's Emergency Management and Homeland Security Division, which will meet with the Genesee County emergency management coordinator.

Snyder press secretary Dave Murray said the governor will seriously consider a state declaration of emergency or disaster, but given the time involved following the procedures to make that decision, the state is treating the situation as an emergency.

"Prior to a formal declaration, we are recognizing this as an emergency and are working with city and county leaders to coordinate efforts, streamline communication and tap all available resources at the state's control," he said. "A formal declaration could take a fair amount of time as people assess their needs and the damages."

Mr. Murray said the State Police have been closely engaged since the beginning of the crisis.

"Due to the uniqueness of this situation, we have to look at all possible options to help Flint residents," Mr. Murray said.

Senate Minority Leader Jim Ananich (D-Flint) called for Mr. Snyder to act quickly on the request.

"This is an important step in the process and the governor should make a swift decision," he said in a statement. "I'll continue pushing hard to make sure we receive additional resources that address immediate and long-term needs, and that they are used efficiently and effectively."

6	$2,000.0	Veto new legislative earmark. Park is owned and managed by the National Park Service, therefore funds should be allocated at the federal level.
7	$1,000.0	Veto new legislative earmark. This project should not be elevated above other water control structures in critical need of repair/replacement. The project could compete against other similar projects for a dam management grant.
8	$280.0	Veto new legislative earmark. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (ACOE) is responsible for the dredging of the Saginaw River and should conduct the study, if one is needed. The U.S. ACOE performed dredging in 2013.

3. CMS Releases Star Ratings For 2016 Medicare Advantage Plans

Almost three out of four beneficiaries are enrolled in medical and drug coverage plans that received at least a four-star quality rating, according to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. The rankings did show a drop for some companies, especially in regard to prescription drug benefits.

Modern Healthcare: Medicare Advantage Star Ratings Reveal Mix Of High, Low Performers
More Medicare Advantage plans nabbed top quality marks for their 2016 plans than last year, a potential sign that private insurers are trying to meet the federal government's standards for high-quality products and coordinated healthcare for seniors. But the CMS' star ratings, released Thursday, also showed that private Medicare plans are still failing on many levels, particularly when it comes to prescription drug benefits. (Herman, 10/8)

Meanwhile, 2016 Medicare Part D premiums will rise for many -

Reuters: Unwelcome News About Medicare's Rising Drug Costs
Seniors have received some unpleasant news in their mailboxes in recent weeks: premiums for many Medicare prescription drug insurance plans will rise at double-digit rates next year. Premiums for the ten most popular Medicare Part D prescription drug plans (PDPs) will rise an average of 8 percent next year - the fastest clip in five years, according to Avalere Health, a consulting and research firm. And five of the top plans will boost their average premiums anywhere from 16 percent to 26 percent. (Miller, 10/8)

HEALTH LAW ISSUES AND IMPLEMENTATION

4. Insurers Seeking More Obamacare Aid Could Wait Years

Insurers who hoped to get billions in aid after opening-year losses from their participation in the health law's insurance marketplaces are only getting 12.6 percent of what they requested after the fund to pay them fell short. In the meantime, Obamacare dropouts get picked up by employer coverage in California, and Wyoming loses one of its two health law insurers.

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette: Affordable Care Act Aid Could Take Years To Reach Insurers
Health insurers that lost millions of dollars last year under the Affordable Care Act may wait years for the government to deliver the aid it promised them. Companies, including Downtown-based insurer Highmark, want about $2.87 billion to help cover their first-year losses from online insurance marketplaces — a centerpiece of the landmark health care law. But a federal relief program meant to limit their risk is more than $2 billion short, leaving the companies to collect only 12.6 percent of those requests late this year, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services said this month. (Smeltz, 10/8)

Los Angeles Times: Many Obamacare Dropouts In California Picked Up Employer Coverage, State Says

Nearly half of the estimated 700,000 Californians who have dropped their Obamacare policies during the past two years have enrolled in an employer-based plan, a new report from the Covered California exchange shows. In a news conference Thursday, Peter Lee, the organization's executive director, said there were about 1.3 million Californians enrolled in the exchange's plans as of June 30. That was about two-thirds of the 2 million who have enrolled in the exchange since it opened Oct. 1, 2013. (Sisson, 10/8)

The Associated Press: Wyoming Loses 1 Of Its 2 Affordable Care Act Insurers

One of the two companies offering health insurance coverage in Wyoming under the federal health care law has decided to drop out of the program after receiving word that the federal government would be providing drastically less financial help than it expected. The news comes as state leaders debate whether the federal government can be trusted to help pay for expansion of a health insurance program for the working poor. (Moen, 10/8)

Also, lawmakers in New Jersey ask the attorney general there to delay proposed insurance plans from Horizon Blue Cross Blue Shield that are meant to save money --

The Associated Press: New Health Insurance Plan Sparks Debate In New Jersey

Two New Jersey senators have asked the state attorney general to delay the biggest health insurer in the state from offering a set of insurance plans that are being sold as money-saving ways to cover health care. Critics fear the Horizon Blue Cross Blue Shield plans could hurt some patients and hospitals. Democratic Sens. Nia Gill and Joseph Vitale say the state should first set up a way to oversee how health insurers rate health care providers when they set up tiered systems. Here's a look at the issue. (Mulvihill, 10/8)

Colorado's cooperative insurance plan faces an uncertain future over cost concerns, and a patient advocacy group rates California's best HMO and PPO plans --

The Associated Press: Low-Cost Health Insurer In Colorado Faces Uncertain Future

Colorado's biggest nonprofit health insurer faces an uncertain future, and its 80,000 or so customers don't know whether their insurer will be able to offer new polices when next year's enrollment period begins soon. Colorado HealthOP, which emerged from the Affordable Care Act, faces possible insolvency because the U.S. government said it won't be able to cover payments to help stabilize premiums in federal insurance markets. (Wyatt, 10/8)

Los Angeles Times: California Agency Ranks Kaiser As Best HMO, Anthem And Cigna As Best PPOs

Kaiser Permanente was the highest-rated HMO and Anthem Blue Cross and Cigna the top-rated PPOs in a new state report. The California Office of the Patient Advocate released ratings Wednesday of 10 HMOs, six PPOs and more than 200 medical groups, just as Californians prepare to choose their health plans for next year from their employers or Covered California, the state's Obamacare exchange. (Pfeifer, 10/8)

5. Bill Would Require Drug, Device Makers To Disclose Pay To Nurses, Physician Assistants

The legislation, introduced in the Senate, would close a loophole in the law that requires public disclosure of such payments to doctors and some other health providers.

ProPublica: Bill Would Add Nurses, Physician Assistants To Pharma Payments Database
A bill proposed Wednesday by two U.S. senators would require drugmakers and medical device manufacturers to publicly disclose their payments to nurse practitioners and physician assistants for promotional talks, consulting, meals and other interactions. The legislation would close a loophole in the Physician Payment Sunshine Act, which requires companies to report such payments to doctors, dentists, chiropractors, optometrists and podiatrists. Companies have so far released more than 15 million payment records, covering August 2013 to December 2014. (Ornstein, 10/8)

And on prices for medical services -

Kaiser Health News: Medical Prices Higher In Areas Where Large Doctor Groups Dominate, Study Finds
Prices for many common medical procedures are higher in areas where physicians are concentrated into larger practice groups, according to a new study. The October Health Affairs study examined the average county prices paid by preferred provider insurance organizations in 2010. It focused on 15 high-volume, high-cost medical procedures across a variety of specialties, including vasectomy, laparoscopic appendectomy, colonoscopy with lesion removal, nasal septum repair, cataract removal and knee replacement. The prices studied reflected the negotiated prices between the PPOs and the physician groups, including payments made by both the plan and the patient. The average price ranged from $2,301 for a total knee replacement to $576 for a vasectomy. (Andrews, 10/9)

6. Med Schools Trying To Adapt To New Health Care Environment

With a revolution in U.S. health care -- in both how care is delivered and paid for -- schools that train doctors are scrambling to revamp. Also, a Michigan paper examines the burden on nurses at an understaffed state hospital, and a study analyzes patient attitudes about being discharged from the hospital.

The Washington Post: A Different Kind Of Care Package
U.S. health care is in a revolution that is starting to shake up one of the most conservative parts of medicine: its antiquated model for training doctors. Once paid a la carte for the procedures and services they perform, physicians are beginning to be reimbursed for keeping their patients healthy. ... The AMA is worried enough about the problem that it has been giving out millions of dollars to prod new kinds of teaching, in the hope that doctors' training can adapt as quickly as the system they will soon join. (Johnson, 10/8)

The Lansing State Journal: Michigan Mental Health Nurses Say OT Hurts Patient Care
The well-being of some 700 patients in state psychiatric hospitals is in the hands of nurses who say they're overworked, overtired and overstressed because of excessively mandated double shifts. Sometimes several days a week, nurses in Michigan's five state-run hospitals end their regular eight-hour shifts only to be ordered to cover staffing shortages by working another eight hours. Against the recommendations of nursing groups and one of the state's own task forces, several current and former nurses at the Michigan Department of Health & Human Services told the State Journal they're worked to the point of exhaustion and ragged nerves, more prone to errors or poor judgment as they deal with unpredictable, sometimes violent patients. (Hinkley, 10/8)

Reuters: Patients Who Feel Ready To Leave The Hospital Are More Satisfied
In a small study of hospitilized patients, those who felt ready to go home when they were discharged were more satisfied with the hospital and their caregivers than those who didn't feel ready to go. It may be useful to use patient readiness for discharge as one measure of quality of care, the authors write in the Journal of the American College of Surgeons. (Doyle, 10/8)

7. House Panel Finds No Financial Wrongdoing By Planned Parenthood, Rep. Chaffetz Says

Chairman of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah) says his committee's hearings have not found that the reproductive health organization is improperly handling its finances. He says investigations may continue. At a hearing yesterday, a former employee said that Planned Parenthood did bill Medicaid for abortion services. The woman made similar claims in a lawsuit that in 2014 an Iowa appeals court said did not have enough evidence to go forward.

The Huffington Post: GOP Probe Into Planned Parenthood Funding Comes Up Empty
Rep. Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah), chairman of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee, said Thursday [during a Judiciary Committee hearing] that the GOP's investigation into Planned Parenthood's use of federal funds hasn't turned up anything. ... Chaffetz said Thursday that he still supports digging into Planned Parenthood's activities, even if they're using their money appropriately. "I think there will continue to be investigations," he said. (Bendry, 10/8)

The Hill: Planned Parenthood Billed Medicaid For Abortion Services, Ex-Employee

Claims

A former Planned Parenthood employee told lawmakers Thursday that she had firsthand knowledge that the organization has billed the federal government for abortion-related ultrasounds and medications, in violation of federal law. Susan Thayer, who spent 17 years working as a clinic manager for Planned Parenthood in Iowa, told lawmakers Thursday that the group had overbilled Medicaid by about $28 million, reasserting claims that have been the subject of a drawn-out court battle in Iowa. ... an appeals court in Iowa ruled in fall 2014 that Thayer did not have detailed enough evidence to accuse Planned Parenthood of submitting false claims. (Ferris, 10/8)

8. From Planned Parenthood To Obamacare: Speaker Race Will Impact Key Health Care Issues, Funding

House Republicans will meet Friday morning to discuss next steps in electing a leader following Rep. Kevin McCarthy's surprise withdrawal from the race Thursday. Rep. Paul Ryan has resisted recruitment appeals so far.

The New York Times: Republicans To Meet Amid Turmoil After Kevin McCarthy's Exit From Speaker Race

House Republicans will meet Friday morning at the Capitol to begin charting a path forward after Representative Kevin McCarthy of California's stunning withdrawal from the race for speaker dashed expectations of an orderly succession and threw Congress deeper into turmoil. The struggle to restore order to their leadership comes as they confront major fiscal issues with rapidly approaching deadlines, and Republican leaders are casting about for a candidate for speaker who can both bring along restive conservatives and maintain the backing of the far larger ranks of the rest of their conference. (Herszenhorn, 10/9)

Wall Street Journal: Paul Ryan Resists Calls To Run For House Speaker

Deprived of a clear pick for House speaker, many Republican lawmakers turned Thursday to Paul Ryan, the 2012 GOP vice presidential nominee, an architect and lead salesman of the party's conservative economic policies. While the Ways and Means committee chairman, said in a statement Thursday that he was "grateful for the encouragement," Mr. Ryan added that he wouldn't be a candidate. ... He has described the chairmanship of the Ways and Committee, a panel that oversees issues such as tax and government health-care policy, Social Security and trade, as an ideal post for him. (McKinnon and Hughes, 10/8)

9. Ariz. Weighs Medicaid Work Requirement, But HHS Has Rejected That For Other States

Arizona has already expanded its Medicaid program, but lawmakers there want to set tougher standards for those who are eligible. News outlets also report on the wait in Montana for the federal government to consider the state's expansion plans and a controversial statement by an aide to the Kansas governor.

Stateline: Should Medicaid Recipients Have To Work?
If Arizona gets its way, its able-bodied, low-income adults will face the toughest requirements in the country to receive health care coverage through Medicaid. Most of the those Medicaid recipients and new applicants would have to have a job, be looking for one or be in job training to qualify for the joint federal-state program for the poor. They would have to contribute their own money to health savings accounts .... Some of Arizona's proposals have been made in other states, and the federal government has signed off on them. It has rejected work requirements, however. (Ollove, 10/8)

The Great Falls Tribune: Waiting For Medicaid Costly To Some Montanans
Holly Blouch wants to be working, and she wants to be healthy. But right now, it's almost impossible to do both. Diagnosed with carcinoid disorder eight years ago, Blouch needed to work to have health insurance to pay for her medical care, which will some day involve needing a kidney transplant. But she can't work enough hours to keep medical insurance because of her health. "There are a lot of people out there like me," said the 37-year-old Kalispell woman. She's referring to herself and the 69,999 other Montanans who now qualify for Medicaid coverage after the Montana Legislature approved the expansion plan this year. But she's got to wait a little while longer to get that coverage while the federal government reviews Montana's waiver application. (Cates, 10/8)

Wichita Eagle: Governor's Press Office Calls Medicaid Expansion 'Morally Reprehensible'
Gov. Sam Brownback's press office blasted Medicaid expansion as an "Obamacare ruse" in an e-mail to supporters Tuesday, signaling that the governor won't back expansion anytime soon. Melika Willoughby, the governor's deputy director of communications, pushed back against the claim that the state's refusal to expand Medicaid helped cause the closure of Mercy Hospital in Independence. "Those who say Medicaid Expansion would save the Independence Hospital are lying. It wouldn't," Willoughby said in an e-mail to the governor's supporters. "Instead, this Obamacare ruse funnels money to big city hospitals, creates a new entitlement class, and fails to rightly prioritize service for disabled citizens." (Lowry, 10/7)

And in other Medicaid news -

Los Angeles Times: Blue Shield's Deal With Regulators On $1.2-Billion Acquisition Draws Fire
Beleaguered insurer Blue Shield of California won state approval for its $1.2-billion acquisition of a Medicaid health plan, but the nonprofit company's deal with regulators drew heavy criticism. The California Department of Managed Health Care said it extracted several key concessions from Blue Shield in an agreement unveiled Thursday. Ending a high-stakes and lengthy battle, the company agreed to permanently relinquish its longtime state tax exemption. (Terhune, 10/8)

The Associated Press: DHS Director Says He Will Leave Department By End Of Year
The director of Arkansas' Department of Human Services said Thursday that he will leave his job by the end of the year. John Selig said in a news release that he told Gov.

Asa Hutchinson about his plans to leave the department that has overseen the implementation of the state's "private option" Medicaid expansion plan. Hutchinson said in an emailed statement that he met with Selig on Wednesday and asked him to stay on through January to help with the transition. (Lauer, 10/8)

10. Big Pharmaceutical Companies Withhold Support Of Trans-Pacific Trade Deal

Negotiators struck a compromise on the major issue of patent protections for biologics and vaccines that left no party completely happy.

The Wall Street Journal: Business Groups Withholding TPP Support On Lack Of Details
Major U.S. business groups, citing internal frictions and uncertainty over the details of President Barack Obama's 12-nation Pacific trade deal, are withholding their support for now, hobbling the administration's early efforts to win congressional backing. With big pharmaceutical companies and several other major industries disappointed by the Trans-Pacific Partnership, the broader business coalitions that have long backed the talks say they first must consult with their members. (Mauldin, 10/8)

NPR: TPP Negotiators Reached Agreement With Sticky Compromise On Biologics Drugs
A big sticking point in the negotiations over the Trans-Pacific Partnership involved biologics medicines and vaccines created from living organisms. The dispute centered on patent protection: how many years drug companies should have before facing competition from generics. The negotiators ended up with a complicated compromise that gives drug makers five to eight years of protection. But nobody is really happy with the outcome. (Zarroli, 10/8)

11. Biotech Stock Poised For Big Gain Or Big Fall

One Wall Street analyst says there's no middle ground forward for investment in biotech firms, whose products are becoming the focus of scrutiny after big price hikes. Elsewhere, a new multiple sclerosis drug from Roche shows promise, and there's news on a takeover bid by Blackstone and an impending sale by Clayton, Dubilier & Rice of a drug-compounding firm.

The Wall Street Journal: Biotechs Are A 'Strong Buy' Or 'Strong Sell,' Wall Street Strategist Says
Biotechnology stocks can't catch a break. And one Wall Street strategist says the volatile price action recently has him expecting one of two things: A sharp turnaround or a deeper plunge. "The group isn't a 'Buy' or 'Sell' here – it is either 'Strong Buy' or 'Strong Sell,'" wrote Nicholas Colas, chief market strategist at brokerage Convergex. Biotechs have long been a volatile sector, well outperforming the large-cap S&P index

during good times and significantly underperforming during bad times. (Scholer, 10/8)

The Wall Street Journal: Roche's MS Drug Reports Promising Results
Roche Holding AG's Genentech unit said its experimental drug ocrelizumab proved effective in three late-stage studies against multiple sclerosis, potentially heralding an important new treatment option for the debilitating disease. In two of the studies, which included 1,656 patients with relapsing multiple sclerosis, the most common form of the condition, ocrelizumab proved superior to the commonly used drug, Rebif, in reducing the annual rate of relapse of major symptoms and other measures of the status of the disease, Roche said. (Winslow, 10/8)

Bloomberg: Blackstone To Acquire BioMed Realty Trust For $4.8B
Blackstone Group agreed to buy landlord BioMed Realty Trust Inc. for $4.8 billion, betting on growth in real estate demand from the life sciences and biotechnology industries. Shares of REITs have been battered this year as investors gird for the first interest-rate hike since 2006, creating opportunities for buyers like New York-based Blackstone to acquire companies relatively cheaply. Health-care spending is rising quickly in the United States, boosting demand for laboratory space that can accommodate pharmaceutical developers and manufacturers. (Callanan and Mulholland, 10/8)

The Wall Street Journal: PharMEDium A Hit For CD&R As Firms Renew Interest In Sector
Clayton Dubilier & Rice's planned sale of drug-compounding company PharMEDium Healthcare Holdings Inc. for $2.58 billion stands to land the private equity firm a nice return on its investment. It also reflects revived interest in compounding pharmacies, which mix or dilute pharmaceutical agents to create hospital-grade dosage forms that aren't commercially available. (Or, 10/8)

12. Oncologists Skipping Expensive Cancer Drugs That Offer Little Or No Benefit

Meanwhile, news outlets report on other cancer care developments like the impact of life-expectancy questions on patients and what elephant genes could teach researchers about fighting the disease.

Reuters: Cancer Doctors Drop Pricey Drugs With Little Effect
U.S. oncologists, aware that patients are paying more of the costs of expensive cancer drugs, are increasingly declining to prescribe medicines that have scant or no effect, even as a last resort. At least half a dozen drugs, including colon cancer treatments Cyramza, from Eli Lilly & Co, and Stivarga, sold by Bayer AG, aren't worth prices that can exceed $100,000 a year, top cancer specialists said in interviews with Reuters. (Beasley, 10/8)

Reuters: Discussing Life Expectancy Gives Advanced Cancer Patients Realistic View

When doctors discuss prognosis with advanced cancer patients, those patients have more realistic views of their life expectancy and don't seem to experience a decrease in emotional wellbeing, according to a new study. "That the vast majority of cancer patients who are dying say that they want to know their prognosis seems surprisingly courageous," said senior author Holly G. Prigerson of Weill Cornell Medical College in New York City. (Doyle, 10/8)

Los Angeles Times: What Elephants Can Teach Scientists About Fighting Cancer In Humans

You've heard that elephants never forget, but did you know they almost never get cancer either? It turns out just 4.8% of known elephant deaths are related to cancer. For humans, cancer-related deaths are much higher — between 11% and 25%, scientists say. The low cancer rate among elephants is particularly intriguing because all things being equal, elephants should get more cancer than we do. (Netburn, 10/8)

13. Proposed Measure To Repeal California Vaccine Law Fails To Get Enough Signatures To Make Ballot

Also in California, Gov. Jerry Brown signs three bills aimed at limiting prescriptions of antipsychotics for foster children. Meanwhile, the Food and Drug Administration faces criticism for its continued approval of OxyContin for kids. And the growing heroin epidemic puts more minors into the state foster systems.

The Associated Press: Measure To Repeal California Vaccine Law Won't Be On Ballot

Proponents of an effort to repeal California's new stricter law requiring mandatory vaccines for schoolchildren failed to submit enough signatures to qualify a ballot initiative asking voters to repeal the law. County election clerks reported receiving fewer than 234,000 of the 366,000 signatures needed to ask California voters to repeal the law, according to figures provided to the secretary of state's office and posted online Thursday. The new state law struck down the state's personal belief exemption for immunizations, a move that requires nearly all public schoolchildren to be vaccinated. (Williams, 10/8)

NPR: California Approves Laws To Cut Use Of Antipsychotics In Foster Care

Efforts to protect children in foster care from being inappropriately medicated with powerful antipsychotic drugs got a big boost forward on Tuesday, when California Gov. Jerry Brown signed three bills into law designed to reform prescribing. Overprescribing of psychiatric meds for foster youth is a persistent problem nationwide, with children given the drugs at double or triple the rate of those not in foster care. (Korry, 10/8)

The New York Times: F.D.A. Approval Of OxyContin Use For Children Continues To Draw Scrutiny

Ever since the Food and Drug Administration approved the use of the narcotic painkiller OxyContin for certain children in August, it has faced unabated criticism from lawmakers and public officials who are wrestling with devastating rates of prescription opioid abuse in their communities. ... The crux of the issue is whether the agency's approval will lead to more prescriptions for OxyContin in young patients. (Saint Louis, 10/8)

Stateline: How Heroin Is Hitting The Foster Care System
Timothy Dick's office receives all kinds of reports of child abuse and neglect. Perhaps a child has a broken bone, or is underfed, or has been left home alone for too long. But when caseworkers drive to the child's home to investigate, they often discover the same root cause. "What we're finding more and more is that the parents are addicted to opiates. And more often than not, it's heroin," said Dick, assistant director of child protective services in Clermont County, Ohio. (Quinton, 10/9)

CNN: Anti-Bullying Laws Appear To Be Working
Roughly 20% of high school students report being bullied at school in the past year, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and 15% of high school students said they were bullied online. That number has gone down significantly since the federal government started collecting data on the problem in 2005. A decade ago, 28% of students reported being bullied. Why? One reason is that anti-bullying laws seem to actually work. That's what a new study in JAMA Pediatrics suggests, although not all bullying laws are equally impactful. (Christensen, 10/8)

The New York Times: Eating Organic Lowers Pesticide Levels In Children
Researchers have found that when children eat organic fruits and vegetables, the amount of pesticides in their bodies declines significantly. Most organophosphorus pesticides have been phased out for residential use, but they are still widely used in agriculture. High doses in agricultural workers can be deadly. (Bakalar, 10/8)

The Associated Press: Researcher: Children's Cancer Linked To Fukushima Radiation
A new study says children living near the Fukushima nuclear meltdowns have been diagnosed with thyroid cancer at a rate 20 to 50 times that of children elsewhere, a difference the authors contend undermines the government's position that more cases have been discovered in the area only because of stringent monitoring. Most of the 370,000 children in Fukushima prefecture (state) have been given ultrasound checkups since the March 2011 meltdowns at the tsunami-ravaged Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear plant. The most recent statistics, released in August, show that thyroid cancer is suspected or confirmed in 137 of those children, a number that rose by 25 from a year earlier. Elsewhere, the disease occurs in only about one or two of every million children per year by some estimates. (Kageyama, 10/8)

14. FDA Recognizes Salt As Generally 'Safe'; Advocacy Group Wants That Status Removed

In other public health news, researchers find that intense early intervention can lead to recovery for people diagnosed with schizophrenia.

McClatchy: Consumer Group Sues FDA For Inaction On Salt
A prominent consumer advocacy group sued the U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Thursday for failing to regulate the amount of salt in the nation's food supply. The Center for Science in the Public Interest wants the FDA to act on the group's 10-year-old petition to lift salt's status as "generally recognized as safe." Doing so would reclassify salt as a food additive, which subjects it to more stringent regulation, like limits on the amounts allowed in processed foods. The legal action is the latest chapter in the group's decades-long efforts to combat excessive sodium consumption. Eating too much salt can lead to high blood pressure, a major risk factor for heart disease, kidney failure and stroke. (Pugh, 10/8)

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Intense Early Intervention For Schizophrenia Leads To Recovery

When the Places for People outreach team found Chandra Thirdkill, she was about 40 years old and had been homeless for two years. Her struggles, however, began as a teen. Everyone looked at her like she was ugly, she thought. No one liked her. She constantly got into fights. Thirdkill dropped out of high school, turned to alcohol and drugs, and was in and out of jail as the fights grew to involve dishes, knives and bricks. Shooting and injuring her then-husband landed her in prison for three years. That's when she was finally diagnosed with schizophrenia. (Munz, 10/8)

15. State Highlights: Another Rural Hospital Closes; N.Y. Expands Low-Cost Health Care To Immigrants; Fla. Kids Losing Special-Needs Services

News outlets report on health issues in Missouri, New York, Florida, California, Georgia, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Minnesota and Maine.

The New York Times: Closing A Hospital, And Fearing For The Future

By this weekend, the last patients will be discharged and Mercy Hospital Independence will close, joining dozens of rural hospitals around the country that have not been able to withstand the financial and demographic challenges buffeting them. The hospital and its outpatient clinics, owned by the Mercy health care system in St. Louis, was where people in this city of 9,000 turned for everything from sore throats to emergency treatment after a car crash. Now, many say they are worried about what losing Mercy will mean not just for their own health, but for their community's future. (Smith and Goodnough, 10/8)

Reuters: New York To Offer Low-Cost Healthcare To Immigrants

New York will become one of the first major U.S. cities to expand low-cost healthcare to uninsured immigrants regardless of their legal status under a pilot program to launch next spring, Mayor Bill de Blasio said on Thursday. The pilot, called Direct Access, will initially apply to 1,000 immigrants. Some of them are in the country legally but still ineligible for support under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, popularly known as Obamacare. The program is expected to expand in the following years. (10/8)

The News Service Of Florida: Senate Panel Wants Answers From DOH On Children's Health Programs

A Florida Senate panel on Wednesday demanded answers from a state Department of Health official about how many special-needs children have recently lost services as the state transitions to a new Medicaid system --- and why. Several members of the Senate Health and Human Services Appropriations Subcommittee said they'd had calls from constituents --- "in tears," in the words of Sen. Aaron Bean, R-Fernandina Beach --- over losing critical health-care services for their children. (Menzel, 10/8)

Georgia Health News: 'Balance Billing' Draws Legislative Scrutiny

A patient scheduled for surgery makes sure that both the hospital and surgeon are in the health plan's network prior to the operation. But after the surgery, a surprise bill arrives for hundreds of dollars. It turns out that the anesthesiologist used in the procedure was not in the patient's insurance network – and the patient had no idea. Such "balance billing" situations often confound and upset consumers receiving medical care – and can lead to tough collections practices. (Miller, 10/8)

Los Angeles Times: Death With Dignity Act In Oregon: A Preview Of What California Might Expect

California's new law, which the 77-year-old former Jesuit seminarian struggled with before signing, was modeled after legislation enacted in Oregon nearly 18 years ago. Whether they call it "death with dignity" or the "corruption of the medical profession," "physician-assisted suicide" or "medical killing," those on both sides of the end-of-life debate do agree on one thing: That Oregon's example offers important lessons for California and its 38.8 million residents, who in the near future will be able to ask a doctor to prescribe them a lethal dose of medication so they can hasten their own deaths. (La Ganga, 10/8)

The Philadelphia Inquirer: Camden County Program To Boost Post-Overdose Care

Camden County is launching a pilot program to support drug-overdose victims who are revived by police only to then wait weeks for a spot in an inpatient treatment center. Dubbed Operation SAL - an acronym for Save A Life and also a tribute to the son of a local addiction-issues advocate - the $150,000 program is designed to help up to 50 people receive intensive outpatient treatment during that waiting period after an overdose. (Lai, 10/8)

NJ Spotlight: Bid For Saint Michael's Could Let State Reshape Future Of Newark Hospitals

In the span of three years, the number of hospitals that the state owns could go from zero to two -- both in Newark, potentially allowing it determine exactly what healthcare in that city will look like for decades to come. The New Jersey Health Care Facilities Financing Authority has emerged as a potential bidder for Saint Michael's Medical Center in Newark, just two years after the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey handed over University Hospital to the state. (Kitchenman, 10/8)

The Philadelphia Inquirer: Nemours Health Teaming With Lancaster County Clinic To Treat Children With Genetic Disorders

Nemours Children's Health System and the Clinic for Special Children in Lancaster County signed a five-year agreement to collaborate on the care of children with rare genetic disorders, the two tax-exempt organizations announced. The clinic, near Strasburg, Pa., was founded in 1989 to treat Old Order Amish and Mennonite children with genetic disorders. (Brukbaker, 10/9)

Minnesota Public Radio: CVS Offering Anti-Overdose Drug Without Prescription
Pharmacists at one of the largest drugstore chains in Minnesota can now distribute an antidote over the counter that can reverse opiate overdoses. CVS has announced that pharmacists at stores in Minnesota and 11 other states are now able to distribute the anti-overdose drug naloxone without a prescription. Another pharmacy based in southern Minnesota is exploring a similar program that's expected to launch before the end of the year. (Collins, 10/8)

Health News Florida: Lawmakers Prepare For Familiar Health Battles
Health care has been a hot-button policy issue for years in the Florida Legislature, and it's starting to look like the session scheduled to start on Jan. 12 will be no different. Battles over Medicaid expansion and payments to hospitals treating low-income patients were so bitter in the spring, it brought the Legislature to a halt. (Shedden, 10/8)

The Associated Press: 3 Working Groups Start Tackling Heroin Problem In Maine
A task force formed to address the state's heroin epidemic held its first meeting on Thursday, with 35 people on three teams focusing on law enforcement, education and treatment, officials said. The three working groups will hold additional meetings to come up with solutions and strategies to turn back the tide of overdose deaths, addiction and drug-related crimes, said U.S. Attorney Thomas Delahanty, who volunteered to establish the working groups after a pair of drug summits in August. (Sharp, 10/8)

The Associated Press: Snyder Supports Switching Flint Water System Back To Detroit
Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder on Thursday called for Flint to switch back to Detroit's water system to address a public health emergency over lead and grapple with broader concerns about the effects of the aging pipes distributing the city's water supply. Flint stopped using water from the Detroit system last year as a cost-cutting measure, opting instead for a supply direct from the Flint River. But since the swap, residents have complained of the water's funky smell, taste and appearance, as well as adverse health reactions, and doctors discovered that the corrosive river water was drawing lead from aging pipes in some homes. (Karoub and Eggert, 10/8)

Health News Florida: Arizona Homeopathic Doc Faces FL Board
A doctor who says she is "dedicated to the natural treatment of cancer" has been ordered to appear before the Florida Board of Medicine on Friday to explain the death of a toddler from an unapproved drug. Martha Grout MD, who left Florida 20 years ago after catching flak for her alternative methods, nevertheless holds a current Florida license. The incident occurred at her alternative medicine center in Scottsdale, Ariz., where she practices "homeopathy," a style of medicine that is not legal in Florida. (Gentry, 10/8)

The Associated Press: Petitions Filed To Allow Medical Marijuana Use In Missouri
The first step to put medical marijuana to a statewide vote next year came Thursday, with supporters filing initiative petitions with the Missouri secretary of state. The two petitions from pro-medical marijuana group New Approach Missouri, would ask voters whether to amend the state constitution to allow physicians to recommend the drug to patients with certain illnesses, such as cancer, epilepsy and post-traumatic stress disorder, as well as "any other chronic, debilitating or otherwise equivalent condition."

(Ballentine, 10/8)

St. Louis Public Radio: Effort Underway To Legalize Medical Marijuana Use In Missouri
Backers of medical marijuana want Missourians to decide if doctors can be allowed to prescribe the drug to critically ill patients. Two ballot initiatives that would do just that were filed on Thursday. Sheila Dundon of Columbia is a registered nurse and a breast cancer survivor. She says past cancer patients advised her to try marijuana to help curb the effects of chemotherapy. (Griffin, 10/8)

HEALTH POLICY RESEARCH

16. Research Roundup: Observation Care At VA; Meeting Charity Standards; Medicare Drug Plans

Each week, KHN compiles a selection of recently released health policy studies and briefs.

Health Affairs: Observation Rates At Veterans' Hospitals More Than Doubled During 2005–13, Similar To Medicare Trends
When neither inpatient admission nor prompt discharge is clearly indicated for a patient in the emergency department, physicians place the patient under observation in a hospital for diagnosis and treatment. The increasing prevalence of observation stays at hospitals reimbursed by Medicare is receiving considerable attention, but the prevalence remains unexplored in Veterans Health Administration (VHA) hospitals, which are subject to different payment policies. Using VHA data for fiscal years 2005–13, we identified trends and variations in observation rates across twenty-one Veteran Integrated Service Networks and 128 VHA hospitals nationwide. We found that observation rates across VHA hospitals more than doubled, from 6.5 percent to 13.8 percent, and that there was substantial variation across both Veteran Integrated Service Networks and hospitals. (Wright et al., 10/5)

Health Affairs: Connecticut's 'Money Follows The Person' Yields Positive Results For Transitioning People Out Of Institutions
[T]he federal Money Follows the Person Rebalancing Demonstration helps qualified individuals living in institutions make the transition to life in the community. The Connecticut Money Follows the Person program is an unusually rich source of data, with information on the 2,262 people who transitioned to the community under that state's program during 2008–14. ... for the majority of respondents who remained in the community, quality of life and life satisfaction improved significantly after transition, and they stayed high. About half of the participants visited hospitals or emergency departments after transition; however, only 14 percent had returned to an institution one year after transition. Predictors of reinstitutionalization included some not previously observed: mental health disability, difficulties with family members before transition, and not exercising choice and control in daily life. (Robison et al., 10/5)

Brookings: A Floor-And-Trade Proposal To Improve The Delivery Of Charity-Care Services By U.S. Nonprofit Hospitals

Many uninsured Americans rely on charity care provided by nonprofit hospitals, which receive substantial tax benefits in exchange for providing community benefits. In this discussion paper we show that the hospitals that receive the largest tax benefits tend to be located in wealthier communities, whereas the demand for uncompensated care is highest in poorer communities. To ameliorate this geographic mismatch between the supply of charity care and the demand for charity care, we propose a floor-and-trade system whereby nonprofit hospitals would be required to meet charity-care standards, either by providing care to local patients or by purchasing credits from other hospitals. The Kaiser Family Foundation: Medicare Part D At Ten Years: The 2015 Marketplace And Key Trends, 2006-2015

This report presents findings from an analysis of the Medicare Part D marketplace in 2015 and changes in features of the drug benefit offered by Part D plans since 2006. ... In 2015, more than 39 million Medicare beneficiaries are enrolled in Medicare drug plans. Since 2006, the share of Medicare beneficiaries enrolled in a Part D plan has increased from 53 percent to 72 percent of all eligible Medicare beneficiaries. ... The average Part D enrollee had a choice of 30 PDPs and 15 MA-PD plans in 2015. ... In 2015, most plans use five cost-sharing tiers: preferred and non-preferred tiers for generic drugs, preferred and non-preferred tiers for brand drugs, and a tier for specialty drugs. ... Cost sharing for brand-name drugs has been relatively stable in recent years. (Hoadley, Cubanski and Neuman, 10/5)

The Commonwealth Fund: U.S. Health Care From A Global Perspective: Spending, Use Of Services, Prices, And Health In 13 Countries

This analysis draws upon data from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development and other cross-national analyses to compare health care spending, supply, utilization, prices, and health outcomes across 13 high-income countries .... These data predate the major insurance provisions of the Affordable Care Act. In 2013, the U.S. spent far more on health care than these other countries. Higher spending appeared to be largely driven by greater use of medical technology and higher health care prices, rather than more frequent doctor visits or hospital admissions. In contrast, U.S. spending on social services made up a relatively small share of the economy relative to other countries. Despite spending more on health care, Americans had poor health outcomes, including shorter life expectancy and greater prevalence of chronic conditions. (Squires and Anderson, 10/8)

CDC's Preventing Chronic Disease Journal: Health Status of Older US Workers and Nonworkers, National Health Interview Survey, 1997–2011

Many US workers are increasingly delaying retirement from work .... We examined the association of older adults' health status with their employment/occupation and other characteristics. National Health Interview Survey data from 1997 through 2011 were pooled for adults aged 65 or older .... Employed older adults had better health outcomes than unemployed older adults. Physically demanding occupations had the lowest risk of poor health outcomes, suggesting a stronger healthy worker effect: service workers were at lowest risk of multiple functional limitations ... and blue-collar workers were at lowest risk of multimorbidity ... and multiple functional limitation .... A strong association exists between employment and health status in older adults beyond what can be explained by socioeconomic factors (eg, education, income) or health behaviors (eg, smoking). (Kachan et al., 9/24)

Here is a selection of news coverage of other recent research:

The Wall Street Journal: How Economic Downturns May Be Good For Your Health
Economic downturns, it turns out, appear to be good for health, according to a study released this week by the National Bureau of Economic Research. The research by Christopher Ruhm, a professor at the University of Virginia, builds upon earlier studies looking at the impact of economic downturns on health. "There is considerable evidence that harmful behaviors–like heavy drinking and smoking–decrease in bad economic times, whereas health-enhancing activities such as exercise and social interactions increase," Mr. Ruhm said. (Sparshott, 10/7)

Reuters: Women Are Missing From HIV Drug Trials
Although women make up roughly half of the world's HIV cases, they remain largely excluded from clinical trials testing drugs, vaccines and potential cures for the virus, a research review confirms. In an analysis spanning several decades that included work done as recently as 2012, researchers found that women typically comprised about 11 percent of participants in trials investigating cures for HIV. Similarly, drug studies were only about 19 percent female and just 38 percent of vaccine trial subjects were women. (Rapaport, 10/2)

Reuters: Caring For Loved One With Alzheimer's May Be Most Stressful For Spouse
Caring for a loved one with Alzheimer's disease isn't easy under the best of circumstances, but it may be much more stressful for spouses and people who suffer from depression, a Finnish study suggests. Researchers followed 236 family caregivers of Alzheimer's patients for three years after the diagnosis. Caregiving appeared to be much more stressful for people who were married to the patients or who suffered from depression when the study began. (Rapaport, 10/2)

Reuters: Perceived Discrimination Linked To Smoking And Poor Diet
Feeling like the target of discrimination may increase a person's odds of harmful behaviors like smoking, eating fatty foods and getting less sleep, a study of African-Americans suggests. Researchers examined the connection between discrimination and these unhealthy habits among almost 5,000 African-American residents of the Jackson, Mississippi metropolitan area. (Rapaport, 10/8)

The Oregonian: Oregonians Billed By Out-Of-Network Health Providers At High Rates, Insurer Group Says
Patients who use health providers outside of their insurer's network can expect bills to be as much as 1,200 percent more than what those services would cost under Medicare, according to a new study from an insurer lobbying group. In Oregon, for instance, a session of computer-targeted radiation therapy to treat tumors costs, on average, $2,409. That's about six times the average Medicare reimbursement rate of $397 — a key benchmark for health care costs. (Budnick, 10/5)

The Wall Street Journal: Study: Attempted Suicide Rises After Weight-Loss Surgery
People who undergo surgery for weight loss are 50% more likely to attempt suicide after the operation than before it, according to a large Canadian study published

Wednesday in the journal JAMA Surgery. The popular procedures, which were performed nearly 200,000 times in the U.S. last year, result in significant weight loss for most patients and often bring about reductions in Type 2 diabetes, hypertension and sleep apnea as well. Many patients also report improved mood and self-esteem. But a small group experience a worsening of depression, substance abuse and eating disorders, past studies have found. (Beck, 10/7)

Reuters: Type Of Weight Loss Surgery Matters For Diabetes Remission
Diabetics considering weight-loss surgery to help send their disease into remission should opt for the most popular procedure, a gastric bypass, researchers suggest. In their study of different types of so-called bariatric surgeries, the biggest impact on diabetes remission was seen with gastric bypass, which can reduce the size of the stomach from about three pints to roughly the size of a shot glass. (Rapaport, 10/6)

The Associated Press: Gene Test Finds Which Breast Cancer Patients Can Skip Chemotherapy
Many women with early-stage breast cancer can skip chemotherapy without hurting their chances of beating the disease, a major new study has found. The 21-gene test accurately identified a group of women whose cancers are so likely to respond to hormone-blocking drugs that adding chemo would do little, if any, good while also exposing them to side effects and other risks, the researchers found. “You can’t do better than that,” says the study leader, Dr. Joseph Sparano of Montefiore Medical Center in New York. (Marchione, 10/3)

The New York Times: Heart Scan Can Fine-Tune Risk Estimate For Patients Considering Statins
Treatment guidelines suggest that nearly half of those over age 40 — nearly 50 million people in the United States — at least consider a cholesterol-lowering statin to reduce heart attack risk. But a new large study of people who had an inexpensive heart scan found that half of those who were statin candidates had no signs of plaque in their heart and very little chance of having a heart attack in the next decade. (Kolata, 10/5)

The Associated Press: Report: More US Hospitals Are Encouraging Breast-Feeding
Health officials say more hospitals are encouraging new mothers to breast-feed. A new report found more than two-thirds of hospitals in 2013 helped women start breast-feeding within an hour after birth. That's up from 44 percent six years earlier. Roughly 90 percent of hospitals teach moms breast-feeding techniques and how to recognize and respond to infant feeding cues. But only about a quarter refrain from giving infants breast milk alternatives — like formula or water — unless medically necessary. (Stobbe, 10/6)

EDITORIALS AND OPINIONS

17. Viewpoints: War Of Words On Kansas Medicaid; Sebelius' Legacy; Mental Health Care Reform

A selection of opinions on health care from around the country.

Huffington Post: This GOP Governor's Comments About The Poor Are Incredibly Revealing

Some Republicans want their party to stop bashing poor people as lazy and undeserving of public assistance. Sam Brownback, the conservative governor of Kansas, doesn't appear to be one of them. Brownback and his allies are in the middle of a major fight over Medicaid, the government-run health insurance program for the poor and disabled. ... And while conservatives who oppose the expansion sometimes rely exclusively on arguments about Medicaid's efficacy -- or perceived lack thereof -- Brownback has been putting his rhetorical emphasis elsewhere. On Tuesday, the governor's deputy communications director, Melika Willoughby, distributed a letter laying out in detail the heart of Brownback's argument -- namely, that expanding Medicaid would be "morally reprehensible" because it would help "able-bodied adults ... who choose not to work" and would send money to "big city hospitals." (Jonathan Cohn, 10/7)

Kansas City Star: Gov. Sam Brownback's Missive On Medicaid Expansion Was Wrong, Cruel And Divisive

Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback's office sent out one of its trademark propaganda pieces on Tuesday, this one on the subject of Medicaid expansion. In its effort to score political points, it maligns low-income Kansans and pits citizens with disabilities against the working poor. As with other recent messages, the email signed by the governor's deputy communications director, Melika Willoughby, is rife with inaccurate information. (10/6)

Kansas City Star: Gov. Sam Brownback Takes The Low Road On Medicaid Expansion

In Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback's world, expanding Medicaid eligibility to more low-income Kansans would create "new government entitlements" for "able-bodied adults" and benefit a small number of "big city hospitals." I'll say this for Melika Willoughby, the deputy communications director who penned that incendiary language in an email on behalf of the Brownback administration: She's got the code words down pat. ... By spewing this sort of vitriol, the governor's office is choosing to argue a complex issue with the lowest forms of talking points. (Barbara Shelly, 10/8)

Forbes: Three Major Problems Left By Sec. Sebelius' Legacy: Obamacare's Medicaid Expansion

While [former HHS Secretary Kathleen] Sebelius resigned in the shadow of a disastrous roll-out of healthcare.gov, her more damaging legacy is the temptation for state leaders to embrace a bigger welfare state and accept an injection of federal dollars funded by Medicare cuts and deficit spending. Medicaid expansion, like Obamacare, fails to deliver on its promises of quality health care that improves the health of enrollees. Even more troubling, ballooning Medicaid expansion costs threaten every other service and will trap millions in a cycle of dependency and poverty. (Tarren Bragdon, 10/7)

Deseret News: Let The People Decide On Medicaid Expansion

I listened with interest to Tuesday's Health Reform Task Force, where members of the Gang of Six presented their "Utah Access" plan for Medicaid expansion. This new proposal, built on the premise that health care providers should pay the majority of the state's expansion costs, did not go over well. Providers are upset, and they have a right to be. Most providers will see no economic benefit from Medicaid expansion. They should not have to pay more than any other Utahn to cover its costs. (Dan Liljenquist, 10/8)

Des Moines Register: Medicaid Savings Are Increasingly Suspect
Perhaps Gov. Terry Branstad thought he could quietly privatize Iowa's Medicaid program. Instruct a state agency to hand over administration to managed care companies, issue a few press releases about "modernization," quickly secure federal approval and hope no one raises a fuss. Except when 4.2 billion public dollars and health care for 560,000 Iowans are on the line, people eventually pay attention to the details. It doesn't take long to realize privatization makes no sense. (10/8)

The Wall Street Journal: Mass Shootings And A Mental-Health Disgrace
We all know how this plays out in Congress: a moment of silence on the House floor and a fraternal feeling of melancholy when the flag over the Capitol is lowered to half-staff. But that moment of silence will not heal the hearts of those who lost a loved one, and it will not stop the next tragedy. Here and now we need action; we need real change. That's why I've authored the Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act. The bill focuses resources and reform where they are most needed: to foster evidence-based care, fix the shortage of psychiatric hospital beds, empower patients and caregivers under HIPAA privacy laws, and help patients get treatment well before their illness spirals into crisis. (Rep. Tim Murphy, R-Penn.)

The New York Times: Getting The Diagnosis Wrong
Diagnostic accuracy is fiendishly difficult to measure precisely, but it is estimated that doctors get it wrong in one out of 10 to one out of 20 cases. Up until now, the focus of the patient safety movement has been on errors of medical treatment — incorrect medications or dosages, postoperative complications, hospital-acquired infections. But diagnostic errors — incorrect or delayed diagnoses — may be more common and potentially more deadly. The Institute of Medicine has taken up the subject, and its new report offers the chilling observation that nearly everyone will experience at least one diagnostic error in their lifetimes. (Ofri, 10/8)

Politico: Planned Parenthood's Cecile Richards Blasts GOP 'Total Lack Of Civility'
Cecile Richards, the president of Planned Parenthood, says she was "stunned by the total lack of civility and use of raw power" by Republican members of Congress during last week's House Oversight and Government Reform hearing on her organization's federal funding, Richards fired back at Congress and Republicans in general in a Guardian article published Thursday, warning that the Supreme Court's 1973 decision in Roe v. Wade is "on the ballot" for next year's presidential election. (Nick Gass, 10/8)

5. Boehner To Leave Congress At The End Of October

News outlets report Friday morning that House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, plans to resign, amidst growing pressure from the conservative wing of the Republican Party. Politico notes that now, free from intra-caucus concerns, he will be free to push a clean stop-gap funding bill through the House to prevent a government shutdown.

USA Today: Speaker John Boehner To Resign From Congress
In a shocking announcement, John Boehner told his GOP colleagues he will step down as House speaker and resign his Ohio congressional seat on Oct. 30. ... His resignation comes the day after Pope Francis became the first pontiff to address a joint meeting of Congress — a crowning achievement of Boehner's career — and amid a congressional fight over federal funding of Planned Parenthood that threatens another government shutdown. (Shesgreen and Allen, 9/25)

NBC News: House Speaker John Boehner To Resign
Boehner has been under prolonged pressure from conservatives in his party, who have accused him of failing to fight the Obama administration on issues important to the GOP. Foes within his party had been pushing to oust him if he presented any legislation that would continue to fund the government and avoid a government shutdown without stripping federal funding for Planned Parenthood. (9/25)

The New York Times: John Boehner Will Resign From Congress
Most recently, Mr. Boehner, 65, was trying to craft a solution to keep the government open through the rest of the year, but was under pressure from a growing base of conservatives who told him that they would not vote for a bill that did not defund Planned Parenthood. Several of those members were on a path to remove Mr. Boehner as speaker, though their ability to do so was far from certain. (Steinhauer, 9/25)

Politico: Speaker John Boehner Retiring From Congress At The End Of October
Speaker John Boehner, who rose from bartender's son to the most powerful man in Congress, will retire at the end of October, ending a tumultuous five-year tenure atop the House of Representatives. ... Now that he doesn't have internal political considerations to weigh, Boehner is certain to push through a government-funding bill next week that funds Planned Parenthood, and keeps the government open. Boehner's decision, relayed in a closed Republican meeting Friday morning, will set off one of the most intense leadership scrambles in modern Congressional GOP politics. (Sherman

6. Senate GOP Fails To Pass Temporary Spending Bill That Defunded Planned Parenthood

With just days left before a possible federal government shutdown, Democrats blocked passage of a bill that would have funded the government through Dec. 11 but included a provision to strip federal funding from the women's health organization. Meanwhile, Republican leaders in both the House and Senate are moving ahead in efforts to pass a clean, bipartisan budget measure.

Los Angeles Times: Senate Fails To Advance Bill That Would Cut Planned Parenthood Funding

With a federal shutdown days away, Senate Republicans tried -- and failed -- on Thursday to advance legislation that would eliminate money for Planned Parenthood but keep government offices and services open. Democrats blocked the bill with a filibuster, refusing to cut funds for the large family planning organization after secretly recorded videos disclosed officials discussing the practice of providing fetal tissue from abortions for research. The debate has become a national conversation on abortion. (Mascaro, 9/24)

USA Today: Democrats Block Planned Parenthood Defunding; McConnell Offers 'Clean Bill'

Senate Democrats blocked a bill Thursday to keep the government funded through Dec. 11 because of a Republican provision to strip Planned Parenthood of federal money for a year. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., moved immediately after the vote to try to avert an Oct. 1 government shutdown by filing a new bill that funds federal agencies but does not include the divisive Planned Parenthood provision. A vote on that bill could come as early as Monday. (Kelly, 9/24)

The Associated Press: McConnell Moves Ahead With Bipartisan Stopgap Spending Bill

In the House, GOP leaders called a meeting of their fractious rank and file for Friday morning to discuss whether to accept the Senate's move or reject it at the risk that continuing the fight over Planned Parenthood would lead to a government shutdown. The White House signaled President Barack Obama would sign the measure, called a continuing resolution, into law — if the House steps aside from the fight tea party Republicans want over "defunding" Planned Parenthood. (Taylor, 9/24)

Politico: Boehner Plots Shutdown Move As Critics Weigh Options

House Republican leaders will move next week to approve a "clean" government spending bill — and avert a shutdown — but only after they hold a vote on a measure to bar federal funding for Planned Parenthood, according to multiple sources familiar with the GOP's plan. The move, which comes as conservatives are weighing whether to try to remove John Boehner as House speaker, was discussed at a closed GOP leadership meeting Thursday. It involves a legislative tactic called an "enrollment correction," which essentially changes the text of a bill that has passed the House and the Senate. But it would ultimately be a meaningless exercise: The Senate would reject the measure, and President Barack Obama has said he will veto any spending bill that tries to defund Planned Parenthood. (Sherman, Palmer and Bresnahan, 9/24)

The Associated Press: House GOP May Opt Against Shutdown Over Planned Parenthood
House GOP leaders have summoned their divided conference for a make-or-break discussion on how to fight taxpayer funding of Planned Parenthood without having the battle lead to a government shutdown next week. ... Friday's meeting is likely to center on immediate action to use a special filibuster-proof budget bill to send legislation defunding Planned Parenthood to Obama's desk for the first time — rather than a futile bid to attach the anti-Planned Parenthood measure to a stopgap spending bill. The temporary measure is needed to avoid a shutdown at midnight on Wednesday. It would fund the government through Dec. 11. (Taylor, 9/25)

McClatchy: Senate Democrats Introduce Legislation To Repeal Obamacare 'Cadillac Tax'
The call to repeal one of the Affordable Care Act's most controversial provisions got louder on Thursday when a group of prominent Democratic senators introduced legislation to abolish the so-called "Cadillac Tax" on high-cost, employer-sponsored health plans. The action further solidified growing bipartisan opposition to the tax, which has already drawn the ire of employers, insurers, unions and benefits groups. They claim the tax would burden working families with higher costs and force employers to cut benefits. (Pugh, 9/24)

HEALTH LAW ISSUES AND IMPLEMENTATION

7. Healthcare.gov Account Information Stored On Vulnerable Database, Audit Finds

The flaws uncovered by auditors are now fixed but included critical issues of security policy, such as not encrypting user sessions. Millions of insurance customers' data is stored on the $110-million system known as MIDAS. In other health law news, a new study shows that Americans' top concern when shopping for health coverage is the monthly premium they will pay.

The Associated Press: Audit Finds Slipshod Cybersecurity At Healthcare.gov
The government stored sensitive personal information on millions of health insurance customers in a computer system with basic security flaws, according to an official audit that uncovered slipshod practices. The Obama administration said it acted quickly to fix all the problems identified by the Health and Human Services inspector general's office. But the episode raises questions about the government's ability to protect a vast new database at a time when cyberattacks are becoming bolder. (Alonso-Zaldivar, 9/24)

NBC News: Monthly Cost Is Top Concern For Health Insurance Shoppers: Survey
Americans, long used to seeking bargains, look mostly at price when they're shopping for health insurance, a new survey shows. More than half of those who looked but didn't buy anything on the new Obamacare exchanges said they couldn't find a plan they could afford, the survey found. And two-thirds who switched coverage said price was the main factor. (Fox, 9/25)

8. Details Of Utah's Much-Anticipated Medicaid Expansion Plan To Be Rolled Out Tuesday

The plan, which faces skepticism from many Republican state legislators and is the product of hours of negotiations, will be the topic of briefings given next week during closed-door meetings.

Salt Lake Tribune: Utah Republican Lawmakers To Huddle Behind Closed Doors On Medicaid Expansion
House and Senate Republicans will meet next week in closed-door caucuses for briefings on a proposal to use Medicaid funds to help provide health insurance to tens of thousands low-income Utahns. The plan they will hear is the product of hours of negotiations between leaders in the House and Senate and Gov. Gary Herbert, launched after Herbert's Healthy Utah plan failed to win support earlier this year in the Republican-dominated House. Depending on the reception the plan receives — particularly from skeptical House members — the governor could call a special session in mid-October to vote on the plan. (Gehrke, 9/24)

KSL: Details Of Medicaid Expansion Plan Plan Due Next Week
Details of the much-anticipated new plan for Medicaid expansion from Gov. Gary Herbert and legislative leaders will be rolled out Tuesday to lawmakers in closed-door meetings before being unveiled publicly. But the governor has yet to sign off on a final proposal, his spokesman, Jon Cox, said Wednesday. "There are still details that need to be negotiated by the group," Cox said. (Riley Roche, 9/24)

Politico Pro: Utah's Medicaid Expansion Hits Funding Roadblock
One red state's unprecedented effort to finance Medicaid expansion through a broad array of health care sectors — from hospitals and doctors to drug makers and pharmacies — is running into serious roadblocks. Utah Gov. Gary Herbert and legislative leaders in July announced a deal to expand Medicaid, agreeing on a framework that would require "providers and benefactors of Medicaid dollars to pay their fair share." But months later, Utah leaders are still facing objections from industry groups who argue they're being asked to pay too much. (Pradhan, 9/24)

9. APA Says Insurance Mergers Would Undermine Access To Mental Health Care

Other prominent doctors groups, including the American Medical Association and the American Academy of Family Physicians, have expressed concern about the proposed mergers' impact on patients.

Reuters: U.S. Insurance Mega Mergers Could Hurt Care - Psychiatric Group
The American Psychiatric Association warned U.S. antitrust regulators this month that two proposed health insurance deals could worsen access to mental health care services, adding to public opposition from several prominent doctors groups. Anthem Inc would become the largest U.S. health insurer through a proposed $47 billion acquisition of Cigna Corp, announced in late July. Earlier that month, Aetna Inc said it would buy Humana Inc and become the largest provider of Medicare plans for older people. (Humer, 9/24)

The Washington Post: Novartis CEO Talks About Drug Costs, Paying Doctors And 'Doing The Right Thing'
As stories of jacked-up drug costs make news, and discussions of health-care reform pepper the campaign trail, Novartis CEO Joseph Jimenez sat down with The Washington Post to talk about how he views his responsibility as leader of one of the world's largest pharmaceutical companies. (Cunningham, 9/24)

NBC News: Turing Isn't The Only Drug Company Hiking Prices By Leaps And Bounds
Turing Pharmaceuticals CEO Martin Shkreli was lambasted this week by medical groups, a presidential candidate and his own industry for raising the price of a 62-year-old drug by more than 5,000 percent. He reversed course under pressure Tuesday night, but not before the national attention struck fear into the hearts of biotech investors over increased scrutiny of drug prices, sending stocks plummeting. Turing may have been an egregious example, but it's not the only one raising eyebrows for skyrocketing price tags. Bernstein analyst Ronny Gal pointed out many companies ratchet up drug prices when the market presents an opportunity. (Tirrell, 9/24)

U.S. News & World Report: Budget Breakers
Prescription drugs are costly and most Americans agree that they pay too much for them. Recent headlines illustrate that point clearly – from presidential candidates' promising to tackle the issue, to a CEO initially announcing a jump in the cost of a parasitic-fighting medicine. And with America's total spending on prescription medicine reaching its highest rate in 13 years, policy groups are listening and are coming up with their own plans for reining in costs. But while citizens are feeling the burden of drug costs, so is the government through publicly funded insurance plans. (Leonard, 9/24)

11. Possible Government Shutdown Won't Delay Oct. 1 Launch Of Revised Medical Coding System

The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services have contingency plans in place for managing the transition to ICD-10. In other medical practice news, physician groups oppose draft language aimed at curbing "surprise" billing. And telemedicine usage is on the rise.

CQ Healthbeat: ICD-10 Transition To Proceed Even If Government Shuts Down

A nationwide changeover to a new set of medical billing codes will proceed on Oct. 1 even if Congress triggers a partial government shutdown that day by missing an appropriations deadline, according to a top federal official. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services already is establishing contingency plans for managing the transition to ICD-10 codes against the potential disruption of a shutdown, said Patrick H. Conway, principal deputy administrator of the agency, on a Thursday call with reporters. Managing the switch from the older ICD-9 codes is among the top priorities for the agency, and CMS has some flexibility in its staffing that can be used to keep the work on track in case of a shutdown, he said. 16. Research Roundup: Economics Of Chronic Care; State-Run Marketplaces

Each week, KHN compiles a selection of recently released health policy studies and briefs.

Annals of Internal Medicine: Medicare Chronic Care Management Payments And Financial Returns To Primary Care Practices--A Modeling Study
Physicians have traditionally been reimbursed for face-to-face visits. A new non–visit-based payment for chronic care management (CCM) of Medicare patients took effect in January 2015. ... If nonphysician staff were to deliver CCM services, net revenue to practices would increase despite opportunity and staffing costs. Practices could expect approximately $332 per enrolled patient per year... if CCM services were delivered by registered nurses (RNs), approximately $372 ... if services were delivered by licensed practical nurses, and approximately $385 ... if services were delivered by medical assistants. ... At a minimum, 131 Medicare patients ... must enroll for practices to recoup the salary and overhead costs of hiring a full-time RN to provide CCM services. (Basu et al., 9/22)

The Commonwealth Fund: The Experiences of State-Run Marketplaces That Use HealthCare.gov
This brief explores the experiences of four states—Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, and Oregon—that established their own exchanges but have operated them with support from the federal HealthCare.gov eligibility and enrollment platform. Drawing on discussions with policymakers, insurers, and brokers, we examine how these supported state-run marketplaces perform their key functions. We find that this model may offer states the ability to maximize their influence over their insurance markets, while limiting the financial risk of running an exchange. (Giovannelli and Lucia, 9/17)

Reuters: Americans Overpaying Hugely For Cancer Drugs - Study
Americans are paying way over the odds for some modern cancer drugs, with pharmaceutical companies charging up to 600 times what the medicines cost to make, according to an independent academic study. The United States also pays more than double the price charged in Europe for these drugs - so-called tyrosine kinase inhibitors (TKIs), a potent class of cancer pills with fewer side effects than chemotherapy. The analysis by pharmacologist Andrew Hill of Britain's University of Liverpool, who will present his findings at the Sept. 25-29 European Cancer Congress in Vienna, is likely to fuel a growing storm over U.S. drug costs. However, the study, which was published in the September 22/29, 2015 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, also identified room for improvement. (Busko, 9/23)

EDITORIALS AND OPINIONS

17. Viewpoints: Pinning Blame For A Possible Shutdown; Medicare Should Help On Drug Prices

A selection of opinions on health care from around the country.

Los Angeles Times: Are Democrats Actually The Ones Trying To Shut Down The Government?
So, who's trying to shut down the government, Democrats or Republicans? The answer, naturally, depends on whom you ask. ... But another way, it was Republicans who decided to tie the continued operation of government to the question of whether Planned Parenthood should receive Medicaid dollars. They took the hostage, they're responsible for the consequences. Feel free to debate the merits of Planned Parenthood all you like, but this fight isn't new. The recent videos didn't seem to persuade any of the organization's supporters in Congress to flip to the other side. So the outcome Thursday wasn't just predictable, it was a certainty. (Jon Healey, 9/24)

The Washington Post's Plum Line: Government Shutdown Fight May Again Shake Up GOP Presidential Race

With the big news out of Congress today the warm welcome received by Pope Francis, one might forget that our nation's august legislature is headed for yet another government shutdown, this time over Republican demands that the government cut off all funding for Planned Parenthood, most of which comes in the form of Medicaid reimbursements for women's health care. This comes at a particularly inopportune time for Republicans. Just when it was starting to look like their chaotic presidential primary might be heading to a more sane place, the shutdown controversy threatens to drag it backwards, boosting the candidates the party fears most. (Paul Waldman, 9/24)

The Washington Post's The Fix: Donald Trump Just Went After Martin Shkreli. Why In The World Isn't The Rest Of The GOP?

Jumping into the prescription drug debate could help elevate those candidates' plans, because prescription drug prices is one of the few health-care issues where Americans agree that the status quo needs to change. In fact, 76 percent of Americans said dealing with prescription drug prices should be Washington's No. 1 health-care priority, according to an April poll from the Kaiser Family Foundation. ... GOP front-runner Donald Trump is regularly praised by liberal leaders, such as Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) and New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D), for his call to raise taxes on the wealthy. Want to out-Trump Trump? Why not start talking about an issue that matters deeply to so many Americans? (Amber Phillips, 9/24)

Huffington Post: Top LGBT Group Wants Congress To Investigate Drug Company That Proposed Massive Price Hike

One of the nation's highest-profile LGBT advocacy organizations has joined the calls for Congress to investigate Turing Pharmaceuticals, the company that recently sparked a national backlash when it proposed hiking the price of a critical anti-infection drug. On Wednesday, The Huffington Post has learned, the Human Rights Campaign sent letters to the chairmen of three key House committees with jurisdiction over health care and the drug industry. In the letters, the organization calls upon the committees to investigate Turing's recent announcement that it would raise the price of drug called Daraprim, a treatment for toxoplasmosis, from $13.50 to $750 a tablet. (Jonathan Cohn, 9/24)

The Philadelphia Inquirer: A 5,455 Percent Price Increase? Expect More Of It

After Pope Francis's visit to the U.S., possibly the biggest news item this week has been the depraved price increase that Turing Pharmaceuticals posted for its drug, Daraprim. Although the 5,455 percent that Turing hiked Daraprim's price is astounding, the absolute daily price is less than that of many other drugs and the practice of gouging prices on specialty drugs is consistent with practices across the industry. (Daniel R. Hoffman, 9/24)

Bloomberg: Let Medicare Tackle High Drug Costs

Yes, the U.S. pays 40 percent more for drugs than other countries do, and last year those costs rose 12.6 percent. But the increase is expected to slow, and drugs still account for just 10 cents of every dollar Americans spend on health care. What has rightly made drug costs a political issue, however, are the astronomical prices of a few specialty medicines. ... The best strategy to push down such prices -- the one endorsed by [Hillary] Clinton and one of her rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination, Bernie Sanders -- is to give Medicare, which pays for 29 percent of all U.S. prescription drug purchases, the ability to negotiate prices with drugmakers. That Medicare doesn't already do this is Congress's fault. (9/24)

Tribune News Service: Patients Win As Larger Insurers Seek To Cut Costs With Better Service

The planned mergers of several of America's largest health insurers Aetna combining with Humana, and Anthem with Cigna is almost certain to be good for the insurers, reducing overhead and improving their bargaining position as they attempt to negotiate better rates with providers. But what's in it for you and me? The answer may surprise you: In all likelihood, the mergers will lead to better medical care at lower costs. (Jon Kaplan, 9/24)

The Washington Post: Want To Fight Poverty? Expand Access To Contraception.

Pope Francis's visit has brought renewed attention to some of our nation's toughest economic challenges: inequality, poverty and income (im)mobility. These are pressing issues that leaders of both political parties say they want to tackle, but they disagree on useful, or even acceptable, policy tools. I have a humble suggestion for an antipoverty policy that, if framed correctly, could appeal to both left and right (though probably not Francis). That policy: better access to contraception. (Catherine Rampell, 9/24)

Forbes: Utah Proposes Tax On The Sick To Pay For Obamacare Medicaid Expansion

After the legislature blocked his Obamacare Medicaid expansion plans in 2014 and 2015, Utah Governor Gary Herbert (R) began working with legislative leaders to negotiate some kind of "compromise" to expand the program to more than 100,000 able-bodied adults. Although the deal is being negotiated in secret, some details have been leaked to the public. According to the few specifics made public, the biggest component of the negotiated framework is to levy a new "assessment" on medical providers in Utah to help pay for the state's share of expansion. But the so-called assessment is simply a new Obamacare tax on the sick that will not only raise health care costs for all Utahns, but add significantly to the national debt. (Nic Horton, Jonathan Ingram and Josh Archambault, 9/24)

The Washington Post's Wonkblog: We Must Act On Global Health Because Millions Of Lives Are At Stake

The report made a strong case that the benefits of the right health investments far exceed the costs. Indeed, I believe the moral and economic case for investments in health care--both prevention and treatment--is as or more compelling than in any other area in the developing world. The dramatic declines in child mortality and increases in life expectancy demonstrate that policy can make an immense difference. (Lawrence Summers, 9/24)

Bloomberg: Pope Moves The Needle In U.S. Politics

Pope Francis hasn't changed any church policies on economics, social justice, war, abortion or gay marriage. As if to underscore that point, on Wednesday he visited the Little Sisters of the Poor, which took the U.S. government to court to fight a requirement that religious organizations cover birth control in the health insurance they provide to employees. Yet in his emphasis on the plight of the poor, immigrants and the environment, this pope has changed the Catholic Church's tone and rebalanced its priorities. That bothers conservative activists in the U.S., where the Catholic hierarchy for three decades has largely been identified with Republicans and the culture wars because of its stress on abortion and gay marriage. (Albert R. Hunt, 9/24)

The New England Journal of Medicine: Physician Payment After The SGR — The New Meritocracy

The “doc fix” — a permanent replacement for the unworkable sustainable growth rate formula (SGR) enacted in 1997 for calculating Medicare's physician fees — had been a long time coming .... At the heart of the legislation is the new Merit-Based Incentive Payment System (MIPS), which replaces the Physician Value-Based Payment Modifier to move physician payment under Medicare further into the territory of value-based purchasing. ... When it is implemented, the MIPS will become the largest physician pay-for-performance scheme in the world and the first to create a single value-based purchasing framework covering the full spectrum of physician specialties. This new meritocracy will need to be flexible enough to account for the heterogeneous practice styles of the professionals who care for Medicare beneficiaries and the settings in which they work. (Meredith B. Rosenthal, 9/24)

The New England Journal of Medicine: Leap Of Faith — Medicare's New Physician Payment System

These changes mark a new era, in which Medicare offers powerful incentives for physicians to participate in ACOs and other innovative payment and delivery models. ... This revamping reflects a broader movement in U.S. health care toward paying for medical services on the basis of value rather than volume — a movement built on the prevailing view in the health policy community that cost-containment efforts can succeed only if we move away from fee-for-service payment. But there are several important problems with this belief and the reforms it inspires. (Jonathan Oberlander and Miriam J. Laugesen, 9/24)

John-
Attached is the draft request for Flint water. I understand that you have spoken with Dan and these numbers may change. We are trying to be inclusive to ensure this is total request and we don't have to go back for more. Call me if you need any clarification or if you want me to update anything.

Director Zimmer- Dan included 2 staff for LARA for the lead exposure testing. Please let us know if that is not accurate.

DRAFT Flint Water FY 2016 Supplemental Budget Request

1. $1 Million for Filters

The $1 million for filters will be used to purchase filters for households in Flint that do not qualify for assistance under any of the DHHS assistance programs. Filters for those residents will be paid for out of funding already in place in DHHS' budget. Each filter cost $20 and were ordered in bulk through Home Depot. Filters are being distributed through local public health, with documentation filed for each filter handed out.

2. $6 Million for switch from Flint River to DWSD

It will cost the City of Flint an additional $1.3 million per month to use DWSD instead of the Flint River. The State and the City agreed to split the cost until June 2016, when the new Karegnondi Water Authority will be completed and Flint will switch to that water source. ($1.3 million for 9 months)

3. $1.5 Million for 12 additional staff to do community Lead Exposure Testing

DEQ, DHHS and LARA are assembling a team to go into schools and high risk homes to test for lead exposure. The request is for 8 staff for DHHS, 2 staff for DEQ and 2 staff for LARA.

4. $1 Million for evaluating sample results at the State Lab

The new testing protocols for schools will require each faucet in the school to be tested and evaluated at the State lab. In addition, lead exposure testing in homes will result in tens of thousands more samples that will be need to processed. Each sample costs $26 to process.

Total Ask: $9.5 Million

Subject: Flint Water follow up

Farah and Elizabeth,
I wanted to follow up quickly to both make sure I've got things square from our side but also present a couple questions.

Current status: Filters (my quick overview of where things stand for the Dept.) – total of $2.016M to be available
To begin purchasing the first round of water filters for local Flint residents, DHHS has begun spending out of an FY16 ARF from the Emergency Services Local Office Allocation (ESLOA) line. To support that spend, DEQ has transferred $1.0 M from their settlement line over to the ESLOA. Either a contingency transfer or supplemental will needed to support this move to ensure proper 'other restricted' authority is within the line. SBO will work on which process to pursue to resolve quickest.

As the filters are expected to need to be replaced at least once, DHHS has put forward an FY15 work project from the ESLOA line for $1.016 M. We're processing that yet today in case the additional funds are necessary later (which we would expect to the be the case).

Question: Is there a better line from which to spend? Perhaps we could utilize something like local public health? (Connects to the point below)

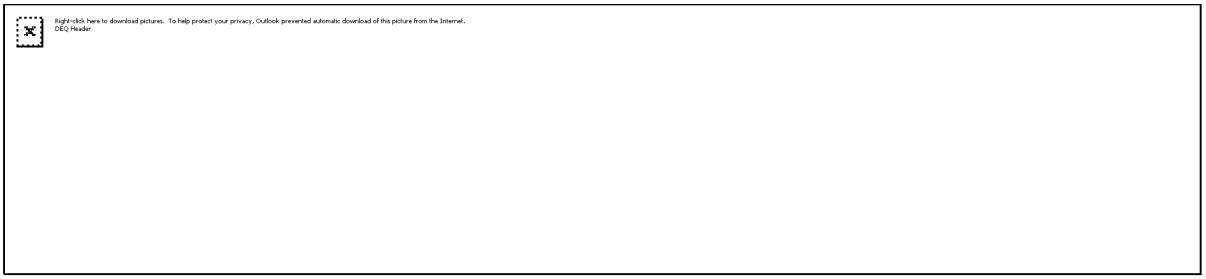
Subject: [DEQ] DEQ Director Dan Wyant issues statement about Flint drinking water

Having trouble viewing this email? View it as a Web page.



DEQ Director Dan Wyant today made the following statement as he announced DEQ Chief Deputy Jim Sygo will immediately assume the role of interim chief of the department's Office of Drinking Water and Municipal Assistance:

"It recently has become clear that our drinking water program staff made a mistake while working with the City of Flint. Simply stated, staff employed a federal protocol they believed was appropriate, and it was not. The water testing steps followed would have been correct for a city less than 50,000 people, but not for a city of nearly 100,000.

As details of the situation emerge, I am convinced our program staff believed they were doing their job right. As the state recognized there could be a health threat to Flint residents, we took appropriate steps. We are now embarked on an unprecedented effort to safeguard Flint residents and families with near-term, intermediate and long-term actions to protect and educate city residents.

The issue in DEQ is experience and protocol with respect to corrosion control. The Governor has called for an independent, third-party after-action review. I have taken the step of changing leadership in the division. We are working with our federal partners and committed to being part of the U.S. EPA's effort to strengthen its Lead and Copper Rule.

All who brought this issue to the department deserve credit for bringing it forward. Lead is a serious issue, particularly for young people, and we take it seriously. The Governor's plan incorporates the suggestions outlined by the EPA and researchers at Virginia Tech.

We will learn from this. We will make necessary changes to see to it that our program becomes a national leader in public health protection."

Just spoke with the agency again, this is more of the Flint water system issue. Specifically, the Hamilton Dam has historically, been the secondary water source for the City, however, with the cancellation of the Detroit Water contract, this is now the primary water source, along with the Flint River. Hence the urgency . . .

Unfortunately, no state DEQ/DNR restricted or federal programs are available for dam repair/removal. Therefore, general fund support has been the default for years. According to a CRC report from 2007, (see page 56 here) the City sought to utilize its sewer and water fund, however, learned it could not borrow from the State Revolving Fund to accommodate the $7.5 million price tag. Given Flint's overall budget situation, and it's water challenges, this is just more of the same . . .

John,

DNR indicates this 100 year old structure, located outside of the U of M Flint campus, is rated as "unsatisfactory" by DEQ/DNR technical staff, with an estimated price tag to repair in the $7.5 million range (2007 report). The City of Flint owns the structure, and State resources to address are simply non-existent.

Specifically, DNR has some $350,000 GF/GP appropriated for dam management assistance statewide. One-time GF/GP support of $2 million was provided in Fy13 for statewide efforts, however, we have been unable to add more monies to date.

[Note: DNR got off of my call to field an heavily anticipated incoming from a scientist knowledgeable about this project. I will provide further update once the agency calls back.]

Thank you Jenny! I have a few items to note.

1) For the $1 million to reconnect to DSW, it is coming from DEQ's settlements fund 0549. It was my understanding that we may be potentially transferring these funds again to DHHS and that these funds would be spent/appropriated from DHHS.
2) For the 2 FTEs under additional agency support, does the DEQ need to do anything to add these FTEs in the FY17 budget?

Colleagues,

Please find attached summary of where the State Budget Office believes we are based on this morning's meeting hosted by Director Wyant. This reflects the State commitment of resources towards provision of filters, reconnecting to Detroit Water & Sewage, and home/school/other inspections. Your quick review would be appreciated, since the Governor wants to share with legislative leaders yet today. I have included your budget officers to assist in the review.

Open issues are: (1) where to place the appropriation for the Flint re-connect and (2) whether (and what) boilerplate we may need/want.

Thanks.

Attachments: Settlements Cash Projection for FY16 10.28.15.xlsx

Hi Jenny!

Attached is a very rough draft of the projections for the settlements fund. Please note the following in your review:

1) The revenue projections are conservative based on the downward trend in enforcement.
2) The projected ending fund balance at the end of FY16 is only $151,400 and $269,800 at the end of FY17.
3) By maintaining such a low fund balance the department loses flexibility to cover other potential emergencies or cover any year end closing issues. If funding/flexibility is not available, appropriation transfers may be needed during the year.

I hope that this information is helpful in your analysis! Please let me know if you need any additional information.

Thank you,
Sylvia

Subject: Drinking Water Program Funding Request

Nancy,

As a follow-up to my voicemail, I am attaching additional information related to the funding request that Director Wyant spoke to John about. The request includes $3.9 million of one-time funding to keep Flint on the Great Lakes Water Authority system until December 2016. The request also includes $3 million of ongoing funding for additional expertise, sampling, and testing.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Thanks,
Amy Epkey, Deputy Director of Administration

Supplemental Boilerplate

Sec. xxxx. From the funds appropriated for the City of Flint Emergency Water Services, the department is authorized to pay $3,900,000 of the water connection service costs to the Detroit Water and Sewerage Department or its successor. The payments shall only be made once a legally executable agreement has been reached between the parties. The funds are intended to support half of the connection costs for July 1, 2016 through December 31, 2016.

PART 2

PROVISIONS CONCERNING APPROPRIATIONS

FOR FISCAL YEAR 2014-2015

GENERAL SECTIONS

Sec. 201. In accordance with the provisions of section 30 of article IX of the state constitution of 1963, total state spending from state resources in this appropriation act for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2015 is $7,775,000.00 and state appropriations paid to local units of government are $0.00.

Sec. 202. The appropriations made and expenditures authorized under this act and the departments, commissions, boards, offices, and programs for which appropriations are made under this act are subject to the management and budget act, 1984 PA 431, MCL 18.1101 to 18.1594.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Sec. 301. (1) From unexpended and unencumbered funds appropriated in 2010 PA 191 for branch and central operations, $6,000,000.00 is appropriated for a business application modernization project and shall be reappropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2015 in an appropriation line entitled information technology services and projects.

(2) The funds described in subsection (1) shall remain available for expenditure to implement provisions of business application modernization ongoing costs. The unexpended funds reappropriated into the information technology services and projects line item are considered work project appropriations, and any unencumbered or unallotted funds are carried forward into the succeeding fiscal year. The following is in compliance with section 451a(1) of the management and budget act, 1984 PA 431, MCL 18.1451a:

(a) The purpose of the projects is to modernize the technical infrastructure to support the business needs of the department.

(b) The projects will be completed by contract staff and state employees.

(c) The total estimated cost of all projects is $6,000,000.00.

(d) The tentative completion date is September 30, 2019.

Sec. 302. (1) Unexpended and unencumbered amounts of funding remaining in accounts appropriated in section 301 of 2011 PA 83, for implementation of the help America vote act of 2002, 42 USC 15031 to 15545, for the secretary of state, shall be reappropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2015 in an appropriation line item entitled help America vote act.

(2) The funds described in subsection (1) shall remain available for expenditure to implement provisions of the help America vote act of 2002, 42 USC 15031 to 15545, section 37 of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.37, and other election reforms. Consistent with the help America vote act of 2002, 42 USC 15031 to 15545, the unexpended funds reappropriated into the help America vote act line item are considered work project appropriations and any unencumbered or unallotted funds are carried forward into succeeding fiscal years. The following is in compliance with section 451a(1) of the management and budget act, 1984 PA 431, MCL 18.1451a:

(a) The purpose of the projects is to implement provisions of the help America vote act of 2002, 42 USC 15031 to 15545, section 37 of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.37, and other election reforms.

(b) The projects will be completed by state employees, by contracts with private vendors, or by grants to local units of government.

(c) The total estimated cost of these projects is identified in each line-item appropriation.

(d) The tentative completion date for these projects is September 30, 2019.

STATE TRANSPORTATION DEPARTMENT

Sec. 401. Unexpended and unencumbered amounts of DOT, federal railroad administration (ARRA) funds appropriated in 2011 PA 157 for high-speed intercity passenger rail (ARRA) shall not lapse pursuant to section 451a(1) of the management and budget act, 1984 PA 431, MCL 18.1451a, but instead are reappropriated for expenditure as originally intended and are a work project meeting the following criteria:

(a) The purpose of the project to be carried forward is to preserve and invest in transportation infrastructure of the state of Michigan.

(b) The projects will be accomplished by state employees and by contract.

(c) The total estimated cost of the project is $26,711,800.00.

(d) The tentative completion date is September 30, 2017.

DEPARTMENT OF TREASURY

Sec. 501. (1) From the funds appropriated in part 1 for special grants, the fund shall allocate $500,000.00 for the purpose of funding the cost of GED testing and certification as provided by this section. The workforce development agency shall administer a

Michigan GED-to-school program, which shall cover the cost of providing the GED test free of charge to individuals who meet all of the following requirements:

(a) The individual has not previously been administered a GED test free of charge under this section.

(b) The individual meets at least 1 of the following requirements:

(i) Prior to taking the GED test, the individual successfully completed a WDA-approved GED preparation program.

(ii) Prior to taking the GED test, the individual completed the official GED practice test and the individual's score indicated that he or she is likely to pass.

(2) A WDA-approved GED preparation program shall include all of the following:

(a) Instructional and tutorial assistance.

(b) GED test practice.

(c) Required attendance at program instructional sessions.

(d) A curriculum that prepares students for opportunities in postsecondary education and the job market.

(e) Information on potential postsecondary and career pathways.

(f) Counseling on preparing for and applying to college.

(g) Personal and job readiness skills development.

(h) Comprehensive information on college costs and financial aid.

(i) College and career assessments.

(j) Computer-based instruction, practice, or remediation.

(3) By January 1, 2016, the workforce development agency shall post online an announcement of the Michigan GED-to-school program, minimum standards for GED preparation program approval, and approval procedures.

(4) By April 1, 2016, the workforce development agency shall do all of the following:

(a) Develop procedures consistent with this section under which individuals can take the GED test without charge.

(b) Provide program information for educators and students on the workforce development agency website, including explanations of the procedures developed under this subsection, and contact information for questions about the program.

(c) Provide an estimate of the full-year cost of the program to the senate and house appropriations subcommittees on general government, the senate and house fiscal agencies, and the state budget director.

(5) By September 30, 2016, the workforce development agency shall report to the senate and house appropriations subcommittees on general government, the senate and house fiscal agencies, and the state budget director on utilization of the GED incentive program, including numbers of GED certifications issued by location, year-to-date expenditures, and numbers of participants qualifying under subsection (1)(b)(i) or (ii), or both.

(6) The unexpended funds appropriated for the GED-to-school program are designated as a work project appropriation, and any unencumbered or unallotted funds shall not lapse at the end of the fiscal year and shall be available for expenditure for projects under this section until the projects have been completed. The following is in compliance with section 451a(1) of the management and budget act, 1984 PA 431, MCL 18.1451a:

(a) The purpose of the project is to fund the cost of GED testing and certification for certain individuals as provided by this section.

(b) The projects will be accomplished by utilizing state employees or contracts with private vendors, or both.

(c) The total estimated cost of the project is $500,000.00.

(d) The tentative completion date is September 30, 2019.

PART 2A

PROVISIONS CONCERNING APPROPRIATIONS

FOR FISCAL YEAR 2015-2016

GENERAL SECTIONS

Sec. 1201. In accordance with the provisions of section 30 of article IX of the state constitution of 1963, total state spending from state resources in this appropriation act for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2016 is $9,350,100.00 and state appropriations paid to local units of government are $6,000,000.00.

Sec. 1202. The appropriations made and expenditures authorized under this act and the departments, commissions, boards, offices, and programs for which appropriations are made under this act are subject to the management and budget act, 1984 PA 431, MCL 18.1101 to 18.1594.

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY

Sec. 1251. From the funds appropriated for the city of Flint emergency water services, the department is authorized to pay up to $6,000,000.00 for reconnection services to the Detroit water and sewerage department or its successor. The payments shall only be made once a legally executable agreement has been reached between the parties and a successful reconnection has occurred to the Flint water system. These funds are intended to pay reconnection costs through June 30, 2016.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Sec. 1301. From the funds appropriated in part 1A for Michigan rehabilitation services, the department shall allocate $6,100,300.00, including federal matching funds, to service authorizations with accredited, community-based rehabilitation organizations for job development and other community employment-related support services.

Sec. 1302. (1) From the funds appropriated in part 1A for in-home community care programs, $400,000.00 shall be used to expand or create new in-home care and community-based juvenile justice services to rural counties through a grant making process. Counties that received funds for the purpose described in section 587 of article X of 2013 PA 59 are not eligible to receive the funds in this section. The department shall have contracts in place for the full amount of funds for the purpose described in this section by January 15 of the current fiscal year.

(2) By June 30 of the current fiscal year, the department shall submit a report that describes the program expansion and expenditures in detail to the senate and house appropriations subcommittees on the department budget, the senate and house fiscal agencies, and the senate and house policy offices.

REPEALERS

Enacting section 1. Sections 587 and 806 of article X of 2015 PA 84 are repealed.

Enacting section 2. Section 1069 of article VIII of 2014 PA 252 is repealed.

Welcome to the First Edition of Stewardship

Welcome to the first edition of Stewardship - The State Universities of Michigan and the Public Good, brought to you by the Michigan Association of State Universities. Published monthly, Stewardship will serve as a media showcase for the tremendous outreach the state universities display in serving their students and communities as well as the State of Michigan and beyond. Covering issues as diverse as K-12 education, economic development, health care, environmental sustainability, and public safety, these media accounts will affirm that Michigan's state universities are public universities serving the public interest.

CAPITOL HILL WATCH

5. Boehner To Leave Congress At The End Of October

News outlets report Friday morning that House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, plans to resign, amidst growing pressure from the conservative wing of the Republican Party. Politico notes that now, free from intra-caucus concerns, he will be free to push a clean stop-gap funding bill through the House to prevent a government shutdown.

USA Today: Speaker John Boehner To Resign From Congress

In a shocking announcement, John Boehner told his GOP colleagues he will step down as House speaker and resign his Ohio congressional seat on Oct. 30. ... His resignation comes the day after Pope Francis became the first pontiff to address a joint meeting of Congress — a crowning achievement of Boehner's career — and amid a congressional fight over federal funding of Planned Parenthood that threatens another government shutdown. (Shesgreen and Allen, 9/25)

NBC News: House Speaker John Boehner To Resign

Boehner has been under prolonged pressure from conservatives in his party, who have accused him of failing to fight the Obama administration on issues important to the GOP. Foes within his party had been pushing to oust him if he presented any legislation that would continue to fund the government and avoid a government shutdown without stripping federal funding for Planned Parenthood. (9/25)

The New York Times: John Boehner Will Resign From Congress

Most recently, Mr. Boehner, 65, was trying to craft a solution to keep the government open through the rest of the year, but was under pressure from a growing base of conservatives who told him that they would not vote for a bill that did not defund Planned Parenthood. Several of those members were on a path to remove Mr. Boehner as speaker, though their ability to do so was far from certain. (Steinhauer, 9/25)

Politico: Speaker John Boehner Retiring From Congress At The End Of October

Speaker John Boehner, who rose from bartender's son to the most powerful man in Congress, will retire at the end of October, ending a tumultuous five-year tenure atop the House of Representatives. ... Now that he doesn't have internal political considerations to weigh, Boehner is certain to push through a government-funding bill next week that funds Planned Parenthood, and keeps the government open. Boehner's decision, relayed in a closed Republican meeting Friday morning, will set off one of the most intense leadership scrambles in modern Congressional GOP politics. (Sherman, 9/25)

6. Senate GOP Fails To Pass Temporary Spending Bill That Defunded

Planned Parenthood

With just days left before a possible federal government shutdown, Democrats blocked passage of a bill that would have funded the government through Dec. 11 but included a provision to strip federal funding from the women's health organization. Meanwhile, Republican leaders in both the House and Senate are moving ahead in efforts to pass a clean, bipartisan budget measure.

Los Angeles Times: Senate Fails To Advance Bill That Would Cut Planned Parenthood Funding

With a federal shutdown days away, Senate Republicans tried -- and failed -- on Thursday to advance legislation that would eliminate money for Planned Parenthood but keep government offices and services open. Democrats blocked the bill with a filibuster, refusing to cut funds for the large family planning organization after secretly recorded videos disclosed officials discussing the practice of providing fetal tissue from abortions for research. The debate has become a national conversation on abortion. (Mascaro, 9/24)

USA Today: Democrats Block Planned Parenthood Defunding; McConnell Offers 'Clean Bill'

Senate Democrats blocked a bill Thursday to keep the government funded through Dec. 11 because of a Republican provision to strip Planned Parenthood of federal money for a year. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., moved immediately after the vote to try to avert an Oct. 1 government shutdown by filing a new bill that funds federal agencies but does not include the divisive Planned Parenthood provision. A vote on that bill could come as early as Monday. (Kelly, 9/24)

The Associated Press: McConnell Moves Ahead With Bipartisan Stopgap Spending Bill

In the House, GOP leaders called a meeting of their fractious rank and file for Friday morning to discuss whether to accept the Senate's move or reject it at the risk that continuing the fight over Planned Parenthood would lead to a government shutdown. The White House signaled President Barack Obama would sign the measure, called a continuing resolution, into law — if the House steps aside from the fight tea party Republicans want over "defunding" Planned Parenthood. (Taylor, 9/24)

Politico: Boehner Plots Shutdown Move As Critics Weigh Options

House Republican leaders will move next week to approve a "clean" government spending bill — and avert a shutdown — but only after they hold a vote on a measure to bar federal funding for Planned Parenthood, according to multiple sources familiar with the GOP's plan. The move, which comes as conservatives are weighing whether to try to remove John Boehner as House speaker, was discussed at a closed GOP leadership meeting Thursday. It involves a legislative tactic called an "enrollment correction," which essentially changes the text of a bill that has passed the House and the Senate. But it would ultimately be a meaningless exercise: The Senate would reject the measure, and President Barack Obama has said he will veto any spending bill that tries to defund Planned Parenthood. (Sherman, Palmer and Bresnahan, 9/24)

The Associated Press: House GOP May Opt Against Shutdown Over Planned

Parenthood

House GOP leaders have summoned their divided conference for a make-or-break discussion on how to fight taxpayer funding of Planned Parenthood without having the battle lead to a government shutdown next week. ... Friday's meeting is likely to center on immediate action to use a special filibuster-proof budget bill to send legislation defunding Planned Parenthood to Obama's desk for the first time — rather than a futile bid to attach the anti-Planned Parenthood measure to a stopgap spending bill. The temporary measure is needed to avoid a shutdown at midnight on Wednesday. It would fund the government through Dec. 11. (Taylor, 9/25)

McClatchy: Senate Democrats Introduce Legislation To Repeal Obamacare 'Cadillac Tax'

The call to repeal one of the Affordable Care Act's most controversial provisions got louder on Thursday when a group of prominent Democratic senators introduced legislation to abolish the so-called "Cadillac Tax" on high-cost, employer-sponsored health plans. The action further solidified growing bipartisan opposition to the tax, which has already drawn the ire of employers, insurers, unions and benefits groups. They claim the tax would burden working families with higher costs and force employers to cut benefits. (Pugh, 9/24)

7. Healthcare.gov Account Information Stored On Vulnerable Database, Audit Finds

The flaws uncovered by auditors are now fixed but included critical issues of security policy, such as not encrypting user sessions. Millions of insurance customers' data is stored on the $110-million system known as MIDAS. In other health law news, a new study shows that Americans' top concern when shopping for health coverage is the monthly premium they will pay.

The Associated Press: Audit Finds Slipshod Cybersecurity At Healthcare.gov

The government stored sensitive personal information on millions of health insurance customers in a computer system with basic security flaws, according to an official audit that uncovered slipshod practices. The Obama administration said it acted quickly to fix all the problems identified by the Health and Human Services inspector general's office. But the episode raises questions about the government's ability to protect a vast new database at a time when cyberattacks are becoming bolder. (Alonso-Zaldivar, 9/24)

NBC News: Monthly Cost Is Top Concern For Health Insurance Shoppers: Survey

Americans, long used to seeking bargains, look mostly at price when they're shopping for health insurance, a new survey shows. More than half of those who looked but didn't buy anything on the new Obamacare exchanges said they couldn't find a plan they could afford, the survey found. And two-thirds who switched coverage said price

was the main factor. (Fox, 9/25)

8. Details Of Utah's Much-Anticipated Medicaid Expansion Plan To Be Rolled Out Tuesday

The plan, which faces skepticism from many Republican state legislators and is the product of hours of negotiations, will be the topic of briefings given next week during closed-door meetings.

Salt Lake Tribune: Utah Republican Lawmakers To Huddle Behind Closed Doors On Medicaid Expansion

House and Senate Republicans will meet next week in closed-door caucuses for briefings on a proposal to use Medicaid funds to help provide health insurance to tens of thousands low-income Utahns. The plan they will hear is the product of hours of negotiations between leaders in the House and Senate and Gov. Gary Herbert, launched after Herbert's Healthy Utah plan failed to win support earlier this year in the Republican-dominated House. Depending on the reception the plan receives — particularly from skeptical House members — the governor could call a special session in mid-October to vote on the plan. (Gehrke, 9/24)

KSL: Details Of Medicaid Expansion Plan Plan Due Next Week

Details of the much-anticipated new plan for Medicaid expansion from Gov. Gary Herbert and legislative leaders will be rolled out Tuesday to lawmakers in closed-door meetings before being unveiled publicly. But the governor has yet to sign off on a final proposal, his spokesman, Jon Cox, said Wednesday. "There are still details that need to be negotiated by the group," Cox said. (Riley Roche, 9/24)

Politico Pro: Utah's Medicaid Expansion Hits Funding Roadblock

One red state's unprecedented effort to finance Medicaid expansion through a broad array of health care sectors — from hospitals and doctors to drug makers and pharmacies — is running into serious roadblocks. Utah Gov. Gary Herbert and legislative leaders in July announced a deal to expand Medicaid, agreeing on a framework that would require "providers and benefactors of Medicaid dollars to pay their fair share." But months later, Utah leaders are still facing objections from industry groups who argue they're being asked to pay too much. (Pradhan, 9/24)

Portland Business Journal: Oregon Medicaid On Track To Convert To Kentucky System, Will Cost $58M

The Oregon Health Authority plans to debut its new Medicaid eligibility system, imported from Kentucky, on Dec. 15. The transition project came in under budget at $58 million, said Sarah Miller, project director for OHA's MAGI Medicaid System Transfer Project. The original estimate of $62 million. Miller said the new system will afford several advantages over the current one. (Hayes, 9/24)

Gov. Asa Hutchinson said Thursday he wants Arkansas to halt work on setting up its own insurance exchange for consumers while lawmakers look at the future of the state's hybrid Medicaid expansion. The Republican governor said he's asked the Arkansas Health Insurance Marketplace board to wait for a legislative task force's recommendations on the "private option" expansion later this year. 9. American Psychiatric Association Says Proposed Insurance Mergers Would Undermine Access To Mental Health Care

Other prominent doctors groups, including the American Medical Association and the American Academy of Family Physicians, have expressed concern about the proposed mergers' impact on patients.

Reuters: U.S. Insurance Mega Mergers Could Hurt Care - Psychiatric Group

The American Psychiatric Association warned U.S. antitrust regulators this month that two proposed health insurance deals could worsen access to mental health care services, adding to public opposition from several prominent doctors groups. Anthem Inc would become the largest U.S. health insurer through a proposed $47 billion acquisition of Cigna Corp, announced in late July. Earlier that month, Aetna Inc said it would buy Humana Inc and become the largest provider of Medicare plans for older people. (Humer, 9/24)

10. 'Doing The Right Thing': The Complicated Business Of Prescription Drug Pricing

With pharmaceutical companies receiving a lot of attention over the skyrocketing costs of drugs, Novartis CEO Joseph Jimenez talks to The Washington Post. And after Turing's controversial price hike for an HIV drug made waves this week, NBC News reports on other similar cases in the industry.

The Washington Post: Novartis CEO Talks About Drug Costs, Paying Doctors And 'Doing The Right Thing'

As stories of jacked-up drug costs make news, and discussions of health-care reform pepper the campaign trail, Novartis CEO Joseph Jimenez sat down with The Washington Post to talk about how he views his responsibility as leader of one of the world's largest pharmaceutical companies. (Cunningham, 9/24)

NBC News: Turing Isn't The Only Drug Company Hiking Prices By Leaps And Bounds

Turing Pharmaceuticals CEO Martin Shkreli was lambasted this week by medical groups, a presidential candidate and his own industry for raising the price of a 62-year-old drug by more than 5,000 percent. He reversed course under pressure Tuesday night, but not before the national attention struck fear into the hearts of biotech investors over increased scrutiny of drug prices, sending stocks plummeting. Turing may have been an egregious example, but it's not the only one raising eyebrows for skyrocketing price tags. Bernstein analyst Ronny Gal pointed out many companies ratchet up drug prices when the market presents an opportunity. (Tirrell, 9/24)

U.S. News & World Report: Budget Breakers

Prescription drugs are costly and most Americans agree that they pay too much for them. Recent headlines illustrate that point clearly – from presidential candidates' promising to tackle the issue, to a CEO initially announcing a jump in the cost of a parasitic-fighting medicine. And with America's total spending on prescription medicine reaching its highest rate in 13 years, policy groups are listening and are coming up with their own plans for reining in costs. But while citizens are feeling the burden of drug costs, so is the government through publicly funded insurance plans. (Leonard, 9/24)

The Wall Street Journal: Federal Judge Declines To Block Steris From Acquiring Synergy Health

A federal judge on Thursday handed a rare court loss to U.S. antitrust enforcers, declining to block Steris Corp., a U.S. infection-prevention company, from acquiring U.K.-based Synergy Health PLC. U.S. District Judge Dan Polster in Cleveland rejected a request by the Federal Trade Commission to issue a preliminary injunction halting the merger, saying the FTC hadn't met its burden of showing the deal was likely to damp competition in the U.S. (Kendall, 9/24)

11. Possible Government Shutdown Won't Delay Oct. 1 Launch Of Revised Medical Coding System

The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services have contingency plans in place for managing the transition to ICD-10. In other medical practice news, physician groups oppose draft language aimed at curbing "surprise" billing. And telemedicine usage is on the rise.

CQ Healthbeat: ICD-10 Transition To Proceed Even If Government Shuts Down

A nationwide changeover to a new set of medical billing codes will proceed on Oct. 1 even if Congress triggers a partial government shutdown that day by missing an appropriations deadline, according to a top federal official. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services already is establishing contingency plans for managing the transition to ICD-10 codes against the potential disruption of a shutdown, said Patrick H. Conway, principal deputy administrator of the agency, on a Thursday call with reporters. Managing the switch from the older ICD-9 codes is among the top priorities for the agency, and CMS has some flexibility in its staffing that can be used to keep the work on track in case of a shutdown, he said. (Young, 9/24)

Politico Pro: Docs Battle Proposal To Curb 'Surprise' Medical Bills

A contentious fight over “surprise” medical bills is complicating an effort to revise a longstanding model state law on health care provider networks. In addition to defending the Affordable Care Act, Clinton released two separate proposals this week. 16. Research Roundup: Economics Of Chronic Care; State-Run Marketplaces

Each week, KHN compiles a selection of recently released health policy studies and briefs.

Annals of Internal Medicine: Medicare Chronic Care Management Payments And Financial Returns To Primary Care Practices--A Modeling Study

Physicians have traditionally been reimbursed for face-to-face visits. A new non–visit-based payment for chronic care management (CCM) of Medicare patients took effect in January 2015. ... If nonphysician staff were to deliver CCM services, net revenue to practices would increase despite opportunity and staffing costs. Practices could expect approximately $332 per enrolled patient per year... if CCM services were delivered by registered nurses (RNs), approximately $372 ... if services were delivered by licensed practical nurses, and approximately $385 ... if services were delivered by medical assistants. ... At a minimum, 131 Medicare patients ... must enroll for practices to recoup the salary and overhead costs of hiring a full-time RN to provide CCM services. (Basu et al., 9/22)

We also examine a third group, higher income seniors without Medicaid, to understand the role of income. Because LTSS needs increase with age, we also examine differences by age. (Garfield, 9/18)

National Governors Association: Using Data To Better Serve The Most Complex Patients: Highlights From NGA's Intensive Work With Seven States
[C]omplex care patients, sometimes referred to as super-utilizers, have comorbid and often serious conditions. ... such conditions often span both physical and behavioral health and are often further complicated by social factors, such as housing instability, poverty, or limited education. ... complex care patients represent only a small proportion (5 percent) of [Medicaid] beneficiaries but account for more than half of program costs. ... the National Governors Association has worked with several states to develop statewide [data] initiatives for improving the management of care for super-utilizers .... The following lessons learned can help state leaders ...: Understand the characteristics of complex populations. ... Identify and target specific patients. ... Ensure effective management and evaluation. (Isasi, 9/23)

Reuters: Americans Overpaying Hugely For Cancer Drugs - Study
Americans are paying way over the odds for some modern cancer drugs, with pharmaceutical companies charging up to 600 times what the medicines cost to make, according to an independent academic study. The United States also pays more than double the price charged in Europe for these drugs - so-called tyrosine kinase inhibitors (TKIs), a potent class of cancer pills with fewer side effects than chemotherapy. The analysis by pharmacologist Andrew Hill of Britain's University of Liverpool, who will present his findings at the Sept. 25-29 European Cancer Congress in Vienna, is likely to fuel a growing storm over U.S. drug costs. (Hirschler, 9/22)

The Philadelphia Inquirer/Health Day: ERs Often 'Safety Net' Care For People With Schizophrenia: CDC
A new report finds that, too often, under-medicated Americans suffering from schizophrenia end up seeking care in the nation's hospital emergency rooms. The report, issued Wednesday by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, found that between 2009 and 2011, over 382,000 visits to ERs were recorded for people aged 18 to 64 with schizophrenia. (9/23)

Reuters: Weight-Loss Surgery May Not Increase Health Costs For Diabetes
Weight loss surgery may be a cost-effective way of lowering blood sugar for many diabetics, not just those who are severely obese, a Swedish study suggests. Researchers found that for people with diabetes, total healthcare costs did not rise in the years following weight-loss surgery, largely because of overall savings from less use of healthcare and medications. (Rapaport, 9/23)

Reuters: A Text Message A Day May Keep The Doctor Away
Texting patients regular reminders to do things like eat right, exercise more and smoke less may help them make lifestyle changes linked to a lower risk of heart attacks and strokes, an Australian study suggests. Researchers sent four texts a week to about 350 people with heart disease to supplement their regular care with reminders designed to encourage healthier habits. Another group of about 350 patients stuck with their usual care routines but didn't receive texts. (9/23)

The New York Times: Consumers Are Embracing Full-Fat Foods

Public health authorities have long urged Americans to cut back on foods high in saturated fat like butter, meat and whole milk. But a new report on dietary-fat consumption suggests that the public is increasingly eating more, not less, of these foods. The new report, which was published last week by the Credit Suisse Research Institute, found that sales of butter in the United States rose 14 percent last year and climbed another 6 percent in the first three months of 2015. Sales of whole milk rose 11 percent in the first half of this year, while skim milk purchases fell 14 percent. The report also predicted that consumption of red meat and eggs would climb in the coming years. (O'Connor, 9/23)

Reuters: Telehealth Visits May Be An Option After Surgery

People may happily, and safely, forgo in-person doctors' visits after surgery by opting instead for talking with their surgeons by phone or video, suggests a small study of U.S. veterans. Most patients preferred the virtual visits and the doctors didn't miss any infections that popped up after surgery, the researchers report in JAMA Surgery. (Seaman, 9/23)

Medscape: Many Poor Kids With Mental Illness Miss Out On Benefits

A "sizable" number of US children with mental disorders who are from low-income households do not receive federal benefits under the Social Security Administration's Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program, according to a new report from the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, in Washington, DC. However, the number of these children who are receiving SSI funds is growing at a pace consistent with the mental health trends in the general population, the report indicates. (Brooks, 9/21)

Medscape: DNR After In-Hospital Cardiac Arrest May Not Match Prognosis

Among patients who had an in-hospital cardiac arrest and successful restoration of spontaneous circulation, do-not-resuscitate (DNR) orders were generally issued quickly and reflected predicted prognosis, a new study reports. However, the study, which was published in the September 22/29, 2015 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, also identified room for improvement. (Busko, 9/23)

EDITORIALS AND OPINIONS

17. Viewpoints: Pinning Blame For A Possible Shutdown; Medicare Should Help On Drug Prices

A selection of opinions on health care from around the country.

Los Angeles Times: Are Democrats Actually The Ones Trying To Shut Down The Government?

So, who's trying to shut down the government, Democrats or Republicans? The answer, naturally, depends on whom you ask. ... Put another way, it was Republicans who decided to tie the continued operation of government to the question of whether Planned Parenthood should receive Medicaid dollars. They took the hostage, they're responsible for the consequences. Feel free to debate the merits of Planned Parenthood all you like, but this fight isn't new. The recent videos didn't seem to persuade any of the organization's supporters in Congress to flip to the other side. So the outcome Thursday wasn't just predictable, it was a certainty. (Jon Healey, 9/24)

The Washington Post's Plum Line: Government Shutdown Fight May Again Shake Up GOP Presidential Race

With the big news out of Congress today the warm welcome received by Pope Francis, one might forget that our nation's august legislature is headed for yet another government shutdown, this time over Republican demands that the government cut off all funding for Planned Parenthood, most of which comes in the form of Medicaid reimbursements for women's health care. This comes at a particularly inopportune time for Republicans. Just when it was starting to look like their chaotic presidential primary might be heading to a more sane place, the shutdown controversy threatens to drag it backwards, boosting the candidates the party fears most. (Paul Waldman, 9/24)

The Washington Post's The Fix: Donald Trump Just Went After Martin Shkreli. Why In The World Isn't The Rest Of The GOP?

Jumping into the prescription drug debate could help elevate those candidates' plans, because prescription drug prices is one of the few health-care issues where Americans agree that the status quo needs to change. In fact, 76 percent of Americans said dealing with prescription drug prices should be Washington's No. 1 health-care priority, according to an April poll from the Kaiser Family Foundation. ... GOP front-runner Donald Trump is regularly praised by liberal leaders, such as Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) and New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D), for his call to raise taxes on the wealthy. Want to out-Trump Trump? Why not start talking about an issue that matters deeply to so many Americans? (Amber Phillips, 9/24)

Huffington Post: Top LGBT Group Wants Congress To Investigate Drug Company That Proposed Massive Price Hike

One of the nation's highest-profile LGBT advocacy organizations has joined the calls for Congress to investigate Turing Pharmaceuticals, the company that recently sparked a national backlash when it proposed hiking the price of a critical anti-infection drug. On Wednesday, The Huffington Post has learned, the Human Rights Campaign sent letters to the chairmen of three key House committees with jurisdiction over health care and the drug industry. In the letters, the organization calls upon the committees to investigate Turing's recent announcement that it would raise the price of drug called Daraprim, a treatment for toxoplasmosis, from $13.50 to $750 a tablet. (Jonathan Cohn, 9/24)

The Philadelphia Inquirer: A 5,455 Percent Price Increase? Expect More Of It

After Pope Francis's visit to the U.S., possibly the biggest news item this week has been the depraved price increase that Turing Pharmaceuticals posted for its drug, Daraprim. Although the 5,455 percent that Turing hiked Daraprim's price is astounding the absolute daily price is less than that of many other drugs and the practice of gouging prices on specialty drugs is consistent with practices across the industry. (Daniel R. Hoffman, 9/24)

Bloomberg: Let Medicare Tackle High Drug Costs

Yes, the U.S. pays 40 percent more for drugs than other countries do, and last year those costs rose 12.6 percent. But the increase is expected to slow, and drugs still account for just 10 cents of every dollar Americans spend on health care. What has rightly made drug costs a political issue, however, are the astronomical prices of a few specialty medicines. ... The best strategy to push down such prices -- the one endorsed by [Hillary] Clinton and one of her rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination, Bernie Sanders -- is to give Medicare, which pays for 29 percent of all U.S. prescription drug purchases, the ability to negotiate prices with drugmakers. That Medicare doesn't already do this is Congress's fault. (9/24)

Tribune News Service: Patients Win As Larger Insurers Seek To Cut Costs With Better Service

The planned mergers of several of America's largest health insurers Aetna combining with Humana, and Anthem with Cigna is almost certain to be good for the insurers, reducing overhead and improving their bargaining position as they attempt to negotiate better rates with providers. But what's in it for you and me? The answer may surprise you: In all likelihood, the mergers will lead to better medical care at lower costs. (Jon Kaplan, 9/24)

The Washington Post: Want To Fight Poverty? Expand Access To Contraception.

Pope Francis's visit has brought renewed attention to some of our nation's toughest economic challenges: inequality, poverty and income (im)mobility. These are pressing issues that leaders of both political parties say they want to tackle, but they disagree on useful, or even acceptable, policy tools. I have a humble suggestion for an antipoverty policy that, if framed correctly, could appeal to both left and right (though probably not Francis). That policy: better access to contraception. (Catherine Rampell, 9/24)

Forbes: Utah Proposes Tax On The Sick To Pay For Obamacare Medicaid Expansion

After the legislature blocked his Obamacare Medicaid expansion plans in 2014 and 2015, Utah Governor Gary Herbert (R) began working with legislative leaders to negotiate some kind of "compromise" to expand the program to more than 100,000 able-bodied adults. Although the deal is being negotiated in secret, some details have been leaked to the public. According to the few specifics made public, the biggest component of the negotiated framework is to levy a new "assessment" on medical providers in Utah to help pay for the state's share of expansion. But the so-called assessment is simply a new Obamacare tax on the sick that will not only raise health care costs for all Utahns, but add significantly to the national debt. (Nic Horton, Jonathan Ingram and Josh Archambault, 9/24)

The Washington Post's Wonkblog: We Must Act On Global Health Because Millions Of Lives Are At Stake

The report made a strong case that the benefits of the right health investments far exceed the costs. Indeed, I believe the moral and economic case for investments in health care--both prevention and treatment--is as or more compelling than in any other area in the developing world. The dramatic declines in child mortality and increases in life expectancy demonstrate that policy can make an immense difference. (Lawrence Summers, 9/24)

Bloomberg: Pope Moves The Needle In U.S. Politics

Pope Francis hasn't changed any church policies on economics, social justice, war, abortion or gay marriage. As if to underscore that point, on Wednesday he visited the Little Sisters of the Poor, which took the U.S. government to court to fight a requirement that religious organizations cover birth control in the health insurance they provide to employees. Yet in his emphasis on the plight of the poor, immigrants and the environment, this pope has changed the Catholic Church's tone and rebalanced its priorities. That bothers conservative activists in the U.S., where the Catholic hierarchy for three decades has largely been identified with Republicans and the culture wars because of its stress on abortion and gay marriage. (Albert R. Hunt, 9/24)

The New England Journal of Medicine: Physician Payment After The SGR — The New Meritocracy

The “doc fix” — a permanent replacement for the unworkable sustainable growth rate formula (SGR) enacted in 1997 for calculating Medicare's physician fees — had been a long time coming .... At the heart of the legislation is the new Merit-Based Incentive Payment System (MIPS), which replaces the Physician Value-Based Payment Modifier to move physician payment under Medicare further into the territory of value-based purchasing. ... When it is implemented, the MIPS will become the largest physician pay-for-performance scheme in the world and the first to create a single value-based purchasing framework covering the full spectrum of physician specialties. This new meritocracy will need to be flexible enough to account for the heterogeneous practice styles of the professionals who care for Medicare beneficiaries and the settings in which they work. (Meredith B. Rosenthal, 9/24)

The New England Journal of Medicine: Leap Of Faith — Medicare's New Physician Payment System

These changes mark a new era, in which Medicare offers powerful incentives for physicians to participate in ACOs and other innovative payment and delivery models. ... This revamping reflects a broader movement in U.S. health care toward paying for medical services on the basis of value rather than volume — a movement built on the prevailing view in the health policy community that cost-containment efforts can succeed only if we move away from fee-for-service payment. But there are several important problems with this belief and the reforms it inspires. (Jonathan Oberlander and Miriam J. Laugesen, 9/24)

CAPITOL HILL WATCH

5. Boehner To Leave Congress At The End Of October

News outlets report Friday morning that House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, plans to resign, amidst growing pressure from the conservative wing of the Republican Party. Politico notes that now, free from intra-caucus concerns, he will be free to push a clean stop-gap funding bill through the House to prevent a government shutdown.

USA Today: Speaker John Boehner To Resign From Congress
In a shocking announcement, John Boehner told his GOP colleagues he will step down as House speaker and resign his Ohio congressional seat on Oct. 30. ... His resignation comes the day after Pope Francis became the first pontiff to address a joint meeting of Congress — a crowning achievement of Boehner's career — and amid a congressional fight over federal funding of Planned Parenthood that threatens another government shutdown. (Shesgreen and Allen, 9/25)

NBC News: House Speaker John Boehner To Resign
Boehner has been under prolonged pressure from conservatives in his party, who have accused him of failing to fight the Obama administration on issues important to the GOP. Foes within his party had been pushing to oust him if he presented any legislation that would continue to fund the government and avoid a government shutdown without stripping federal funding for Planned Parenthood. (9/25)

The New York Times: John Boehner Will Resign From Congress
Most recently, Mr. Boehner, 65, was trying to craft a solution to keep the government open through the rest of the year, but was under pressure from a growing base of conservatives who told him that they would not vote for a bill that did not defund Planned Parenthood. Several of those members were on a path to remove Mr. Boehner as speaker, though their ability to do so was far from certain. (Steinhauer, 9/25)

Politico: Speaker John Boehner Retiring From Congress At The End Of October
Speaker John Boehner, who rose from bartender's son to the most powerful man in Congress, will retire at the end of October, ending a tumultuous five-year tenure atop the House of Representatives. ... Now that he doesn't have internal political considerations to weigh, Boehner is certain to push through a government-funding bill next week that funds Planned Parenthood, and keeps the government open. Boehner's decision, relayed in a closed Republican meeting Friday morning, will set off one of the most intense leadership scrambles in modern Congressional GOP politics. (Sherman, 9/25)

6. Senate GOP Fails To Pass Temporary Spending Bill That Defunded Planned Parenthood

With just days left before a possible federal government shutdown, Democrats blocked passage of a bill that would have funded the government through Dec. 11 but included a provision to strip federal funding from the women's health organization. Meanwhile, Republican leaders in both the House and Senate are moving ahead in efforts to pass a clean, bipartisan budget measure.

Los Angeles Times: Senate Fails To Advance Bill That Would Cut Planned Parenthood Funding
With a federal shutdown days away, Senate Republicans tried -- and failed -- on Thursday to advance legislation that would eliminate money for Planned Parenthood but keep government offices and services open. Democrats blocked the bill with a filibuster, refusing to cut funds for the large family planning organization after secretly recorded videos disclosed officials discussing the practice of providing fetal tissue from abortions for research. The debate has become a national conversation on abortion. (Mascaro, 9/24)

USA Today: Democrats Block Planned Parenthood Defunding; McConnell Offers 'Clean Bill'
Senate Democrats blocked a bill Thursday to keep the government funded through Dec. 11 because of a Republican provision to strip Planned Parenthood of federal money for a year. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., moved immediately after the vote to try to avert an Oct. 1 government shutdown by filing a new bill that funds federal agencies but does not include the divisive Planned Parenthood provision. A vote on that bill could come as early as Monday. (Kelly, 9/24)

The Associated Press: McConnell Moves Ahead With Bipartisan Stopgap Spending Bill
In the House, GOP leaders called a meeting of their fractious rank and file for Friday morning to discuss whether to accept the Senate's move or reject it at the risk that continuing the fight over Planned Parenthood would lead to a government shutdown. The White House signaled President Barack Obama would sign the measure, called a continuing resolution, into law — if the House steps aside from the fight tea party Republicans want over "defunding" Planned Parenthood. (Taylor, 9/24)

Politico: Boehner Plots Shutdown Move As Critics Weigh Options
House Republican leaders will move next week to approve a "clean" government spending bill — and avert a shutdown — but only after they hold a vote on a measure to bar federal funding for Planned Parenthood, according to multiple sources familiar with the GOP's plan. The move, which comes as conservatives are weighing whether to try to remove John Boehner as House speaker, was discussed at a closed GOP leadership meeting Thursday. It involves a legislative tactic called an "enrollment correction," which essentially changes the text of a bill that has passed the House and the Senate. But it would ultimately be a meaningless exercise: The Senate would reject the measure, and President Barack Obama has said he will veto any spending bill that tries to defund Planned Parenthood. (Sherman, Palmer and Bresnahan, 9/24)

The Associated Press: House GOP May Opt Against Shutdown Over Planned

Parenthood
House GOP leaders have summoned their divided conference for a make-or-break discussion on how to fight taxpayer funding of Planned Parenthood without having the battle lead to a government shutdown next week. ... Friday's meeting is likely to center on immediate action to use a special filibuster-proof budget bill to send legislation defunding Planned Parenthood to Obama's desk for the first time — rather than a futile bid to attach the anti-Planned Parenthood measure to a stopgap spending bill. The temporary measure is needed to avoid a shutdown at midnight on Wednesday. It would fund the government through Dec. 11. (Taylor, 9/25)

In other Capitol Hill action -

McClatchy: Senate Democrats Introduce Legislation To Repeal Obamacare 'Cadillac Tax'
The call to repeal one of the Affordable Care Act's most controversial provisions got louder on Thursday when a group of prominent Democratic senators introduced legislation to abolish the so-called "Cadillac Tax" on high-cost, employer-sponsored health plans. The action further solidified growing bipartisan opposition to the tax, which has already drawn the ire of employers, insurers, unions and benefits groups. They claim the tax would burden working families with higher costs and force employers to cut benefits. (Pugh, 9/24)

HEALTH LAW ISSUES AND IMPLEMENTATION

7. Healthcare.gov Account Information Stored On Vulnerable Database, Audit Finds

The flaws uncovered by auditors are now fixed but included critical issues of security policy, such as not encrypting user sessions. Millions of insurance customers' data is stored on the $110-million system known as MIDAS. In other health law news, a new study shows that Americans' top concern when shopping for health coverage is the monthly premium they will pay.

The Associated Press: Audit Finds Slipshod Cybersecurity At Healthcare.gov
The government stored sensitive personal information on millions of health insurance customers in a computer system with basic security flaws, according to an official audit that uncovered slipshod practices. The Obama administration said it acted quickly to fix all the problems identified by the Health and Human Services inspector general's office. But the episode raises questions about the government's ability to protect a vast new database at a time when cyberattacks are becoming bolder. (Alonso-Zaldivar, 9/24)

NBC News: Monthly Cost Is Top Concern For Health Insurance Shoppers: Survey
Americans, long used to seeking bargains, look mostly at price when they're shopping for health insurance, a new survey shows. More than half of those who looked but didn't buy anything on the new Obamacare exchanges said they couldn't find a plan they could afford, the survey found. And two-thirds who switched coverage said price

was the main factor. (Fox, 9/25)

8. Details Of Utah's Much-Anticipated Medicaid Expansion Plan To Be Rolled Out Tuesday

The plan, which faces skepticism from many Republican state legislators and is the product of hours of negotiations, will be the topic of briefings given next week during closed-door meetings.

Salt Lake Tribune: Utah Republican Lawmakers To Huddle Behind Closed Doors On Medicaid Expansion
House and Senate Republicans will meet next week in closed-door caucuses for briefings on a proposal to use Medicaid funds to help provide health insurance to tens of thousands low-income Utahns. The plan they will hear is the product of hours of negotiations between leaders in the House and Senate and Gov. Gary Herbert, launched after Herbert's Healthy Utah plan failed to win support earlier this year in the Republican-dominated House. Depending on the reception the plan receives — particularly from skeptical House members — the governor could call a special session in mid-October to vote on the plan. (Gehrke, 9/24)

KSL: Details Of Medicaid Expansion Plan Plan Due Next Week
Details of the much-anticipated new plan for Medicaid expansion from Gov. Gary Herbert and legislative leaders will be rolled out Tuesday to lawmakers in closed-door meetings before being unveiled publicly. But the governor has yet to sign off on a final proposal, his spokesman, Jon Cox, said Wednesday. "There are still details that need to be negotiated by the group," Cox said. (Riley Roche, 9/24)

Politico Pro: Utah's Medicaid Expansion Hits Funding Roadblock
One red state's unprecedented effort to finance Medicaid expansion through a broad array of health care sectors — from hospitals and doctors to drug makers and pharmacies — is running into serious roadblocks. Utah Gov. Gary Herbert and legislative leaders in July announced a deal to expand Medicaid, agreeing on a framework that would require "providers and benefactors of Medicaid dollars to pay their fair share." But months later, Utah leaders are still facing objections from industry groups who argue they're being asked to pay too much. (Pradhan, 9/24)

Also, Oregon is converting its Medicaid eligibility system to the one used by Kentucky -

Portland Business Journal: Oregon Medicaid On Track To Convert To Kentucky System, Will Cost $58M
The Oregon Health Authority plans to debut its new Medicaid eligibility system, imported from Kentucky, on Dec. 15. The transition project came in under budget at $58 million, said Sarah Miller, project director for OHA's MAGI Medicaid System Transfer Project. The original estimate of $62 million. Miller said the new system will afford several advantages over the current one. (Hayes, 9/24)

Meanwhile, on the topic of health exchanges -

The Associated Press: Arkansas Governor Asks Panel To Put Exchange Plans On Hold

Gov. Asa Hutchinson said Thursday he wants Arkansas to halt work on setting up its own insurance exchange for consumers while lawmakers look at the future of the state's hybrid Medicaid expansion. The Republican governor said he's asked the Arkansas Health Insurance Marketplace board to wait for a legislative task force's recommendations on the "private option" expansion later this year. (DeMillo, 9/24)

9. APA Says Insurance Mergers Would Undermine Access To Mental Health Care

Other prominent doctors groups, including the American Medical Association and the American Academy of Family Physicians, have expressed concern about the proposed mergers' impact on patients.

Reuters: U.S. Insurance Mega Mergers Could Hurt Care - Psychiatric Group
The American Psychiatric Association warned U.S. antitrust regulators this month that two proposed health insurance deals could worsen access to mental health care services, adding to public opposition from several prominent doctors groups. Anthem Inc would become the largest U.S. health insurer through a proposed $47 billion acquisition of Cigna Corp, announced in late July. Earlier that month, Aetna Inc said it would buy Humana Inc and become the largest provider of Medicare plans for older people. (Humer, 9/24)

In other industry news -

The Philadelphia Inquirer: Blue Cross Plans Helping Corporate Clients Cut Health Costs
The Blue Cross Blue Shield Association on Thursday unveiled an expanded database that will help individual Blues, like Philadelphia's Independence, drill down into the cost of care for their corporate customers who have operations nationwide. he Blue Cross Blue Shield Association, whose members cover 105 million Americans, has maintained a claims database for a decade, and Independence has contributed for years. But now all 36 Blue Cross companies are required to share claims data, which are converted into 1,600 common treatments and elective procedures - up from 300 previously. (Brubaker, 9/25)

10. 'Doing The Right Thing': The Complicated Business Of Prescription Drug Pricing

With pharmaceutical companies receiving a lot of attention over the skyrocketing costs of drugs, Novartis CEO Joseph Jimenez talks to The Washington Post. And after Turing's controversial price hike for an HIV drug made waves this week, NBC News reports on other similar cases in the industry.

The Washington Post: Novartis CEO Talks About Drug Costs, Paying Doctors And 'Doing The Right Thing'
As stories of jacked-up drug costs make news, and discussions of health-care reform pepper the campaign trail, Novartis CEO Joseph Jimenez sat down with The Washington Post to talk about how he views his responsibility as leader of one of the world's largest pharmaceutical companies. (Cunningham, 9/24)

NBC News: Turing Isn't The Only Drug Company Hiking Prices By Leaps And Bounds
Turing Pharmaceuticals CEO Martin Shkreli was lambasted this week by medical groups, a presidential candidate and his own industry for raising the price of a 62-year-old drug by more than 5,000 percent. He reversed course under pressure Tuesday night, but not before the national attention struck fear into the hearts of biotech investors over increased scrutiny of drug prices, sending stocks plummeting. Turing may have been an egregious example, but it's not the only one raising eyebrows for skyrocketing price tags. Bernstein analyst Ronny Gal pointed out many companies ratchet up drug prices when the market presents an opportunity. (Tirrell, 9/24)

U.S. News & World Report: Budget Breakers
Prescription drugs are costly and most Americans agree that they pay too much for them. Recent headlines illustrate that point clearly – from presidential candidates' promising to tackle the issue, to a CEO initially announcing a jump in the cost of a parasitic-fighting medicine. And with America's total spending on prescription medicine reaching its highest rate in 13 years, policy groups are listening and are coming up with their own plans for reining in costs. But while citizens are feeling the burden of drug costs, so is the government through publicly funded insurance plans. (Leonard, 9/24)

Meanwhile, antitrust enforcers suffer a rare court defeat when challenging a merger -

The Wall Street Journal: Federal Judge Declines To Block Steris From Acquiring Synergy Health
A federal judge on Thursday handed a rare court loss to U.S. antitrust enforcers, declining to block Steris Corp., a U.S. infection-prevention company, from acquiring U.K.-based Synergy Health PLC. U.S. District Judge Dan Polster in Cleveland rejected a request by the Federal Trade Commission to issue a preliminary injunction halting the merger, saying the FTC hadn't met its burden of showing the deal was likely to damp competition in the U.S. (Kendall, 9/24)

11. Possible Government Shutdown Won't Delay Oct. 1 Launch Of Revised Medical Coding System

The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services have contingency plans in place for managing the transition to ICD-10. In other medical practice news, physician groups oppose draft language aimed at curbing "surprise" billing. And telemedicine usage is on the rise.

CQ Healthbeat: ICD-10 Transition To Proceed Even If Government Shuts Down
A nationwide changeover to a new set of medical billing codes will proceed on Oct. 1 even if Congress triggers a partial government shutdown that day by missing an appropriations deadline, according to a top federal official. The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services already is establishing contingency plans for managing the transition to ICD-10 codes against the potential disruption of a shutdown, said Patrick H. Conway, principal deputy administrator of the agency, on a Thursday call with reporters. Managing the switch from the older ICD-9 codes is among the top priorities for the agency, and CMS has some flexibility in its staffing that can be used to keep the work on track in case of a shutdown, he said. (Young, 9/24)

Politico Pro: Docs Battle Proposal To Curb 'Surprise' Medical Bills
A contentious fight over "surprise" medical bills is complicating an effort to revise a longstanding model state law on health care provider networks. The American Medical Association and other physician groups are pushing the National Association of Insurance Commissioners to drop draft language addressing what happens when patients visit facilities that are in their insurance networks but receive treatment from out-of-network providers. McClatchy: Telemedicine Holds Promise Of Cheaper, Wider Medical Care
Samantha Cunningham was halfway through a five-hour road trip to a music festival in Bradley, Calif., when she realized she'd left her asthma inhaler back home in Sacramento. Her options seemed limited: go back, pick it up and be late for the concert; pay a $100 minimum fee to get a new prescription at a walk-in clinic; "or go without the inhaler and hope that they had a rescue machine at the festival on the off chance I had an asthma attack, which, of course, wasn't a very inviting prospect," Cunningham said. 12. Fiorina's Position On Mandated Health Insurance Evolves Over Past Two Years

CNN questions the Republican candidate's campaign on statements Carly Fiorina made in a 2013 interview, while NPR reports on her abortion stance. Meanwhile, KHN analyzes Hillary Clinton's proposals to save consumers money on health care.

CNN: Fiorina's Long-Held Support For Mandatory Health Insurance
Carly Fiorina, who has joined other leading Republican presidential candidates in denouncing Obamacare, once backed an individual mandate to buy health insurance that could put her at odds with others in the GOP. (Moody, 9/24)

NPR: Carly Fiorina Doubles Down On Opposition To Abortion In South Carolina
Republican presidential candidate Carly Fiorina campaigned at a Christian pregnancy care center in South Carolina Thursday. Opposition to abortion has become a prominent message in her campaign recently. (McCammon, 9/24)

Kaiser Health News: Clinton Seeks To Build On Health Law, But Does She Have The Rx For Rising Health Costs?
While the Republicans running for president are united in their desire to repeal the federal health law, Democrat Hillary Rodham Clinton is fashioning her own health care agenda to tackle out-of-pocket costs – but industry experts question whether her proposals would solve the problem. In addition to defending the Affordable Care Act, Clinton released two separate proposals this week. One would seek to protect people with insurance from having to pay thousands of dollars in addition to their premiums for prescription drugs; the other would set overall limits on out-of-pocket health spending for those with insurance. (Rovner, 9/25)

13. Premera Faces 38 Class-Action Lawsuits Over Cyberattack

A security breach of the insurance company's computer system may have compromised the personal information of 11 million customers. Some of them are suing, citing attempts at identify theft. In other Health IT news, a Walgreens database outage delayed prescriptions at thousands of pharmacies.

The Seattle Times: Premera Sued Over Security Breaches
With less than a week left to apply, about 830,000 of almost 11 million current and former insurance customers have registered for credit monitoring and identity-theft protection after their personal and medical information may have been compromised in a security breach that Premera announced in March. Mountlake Terrace-based Premera maintains that it does not "have any evidence that there was any criminal activity on anyone's account as a result of the cyberattack," company spokeswoman Melanie Coon said in an email statement. (Garnick, 9/24)

The Chicago Tribune: Outage Of Walgreens Pharmacy Computer Database Causes Prescription Delays
Getting a prescription filled at Walgreens may take a lot longer than usual over the next few days due to an ongoing outage of the drugstore chain's pharmacy computer database. Pharmacists have been filling prescriptions manually since the system went down Tuesday morning, causing delays for customers at all 8,200 Walgreens drugstores across the U.S., a company spokesman said Thursday. 14. FDA Needs More Info To Gauge Safety Of Essure Sterilization Device

The agency also wrote in a letter Thursday that a health-care startup's cancer detection kit, which would be sold directly to healthy individuals, is high-risk and could harm public health.

NPR: FDA Advisers Call For More Safety Data On Sterilization Device
The Food and Drug Administration should gather more information to try to get a better sense of the safety of the Essure sterilization device, a panel of experts assembled by the agency recommended Thursday. (Stein, 9/24)

Bloomberg: Startup's Cancer Test For The Healthy May Harm Public, FDA Says
The Food and Drug Administration said Thursday that a health-care startup's cancer detection kit sold to healthy individuals is high-risk, could harm public health, and hasn't been validated by science. The FDA wrote to Pathway Genomics Corp. on Sept. 21 about the test, which retails for as much as $699. Patients get the test ordered by their doctor or one working for Pathway, then the company analyzes a blood sample for circulating traces of cancer. The company, which is backed by IBM Corp. and the venture capital firm Founders Fund, has touted the test as a less-expensive, faster way of detecting tumors. (Edney and Chen, 9/24)

Health care stories are reported from Connecticut, California, Florida, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Alabama, District of Columbia, Kansas, Iowa, Nevada, North Carolina, Michigan and Texas.

The Connecticut Mirror: Hospital CEO Pay: Red Herring Or Key In State Funding Debate?
As hospital leaders warn of potential job and service reductions in response to state funding cuts, the six- and seven-figure pay packages of Connecticut hospital executives have emerged as a point of contention. (Levin Becker, 9/25)

NPR: California Counties Add Health Care For Immigrant Adults

Contra Costa County, east of San Francisco, joins 46 other California counties that have agreed to provide non-emergency care to immigrants who entered the country illegally. (Romero, 9/24)

News Service Of Florida: Bondi, Hospital System Reach $3.5M Settlement
Two days after the U.S. Department of Justice announced a $115 million legal settlement with Adventist Health System, Florida Attorney General Pam Bondi said Wednesday her office has reached a $3.5 million settlement with the Altamonte Springs-based hospital system. Both settlements, which stem from whistleblower lawsuits filed by Adventist employees, involve allegations that the hospital firm had improper financial arrangements with physicians. (9/24)

The Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel: Assembly Passes Measure Cutting Taxpayer Funding Of Planned Parenthood
The state Assembly voted Thursday to strip Planned Parenthood of about $3.5 million in government funding a year. The measure passed, 60-35, with all Republicans backing it and all Democrats opposing it. It now goes to the Senate, which like the Assembly is controlled by Republicans. (Marley, 9/24)

The Wall Street Journal: Lawmakers Fail To Override Christie Veto
New Jersey Democrats unsuccessfully attempted on Thursday to override Gov. Chris Christie's veto of a gun-control bill when most GOP supporters of the legislation decided not to buck the presidential candidate. The legislation would have prevented people with a documented history of mental illness from expunging that record to buy a gun. (Haddon, 9/24)

The New York Times: Alabama Vote Is Rare Win In The South For The U.A.W.
The 2-to-1 margin of victory at the small factory, which makes seats for trucks, represents an unusual win in the uphill battle to organize autoworkers in the South. But it was unclear whether the vote signaled a broader breakthrough for labor and the U.A.W. in a region that has historically been allergic to most unions. Employees at C.V.G. cited low pay, which tops out at $15.80 an hour, the growing use of temporary workers at even lower wages and rising health insurance costs as reasons they voted to join the union. (Cohen, 9/24)

Kaiser Health News: D.C. Women To Get Access To Full Year's Worth Of Contraceptives
Under a new law, District of Columbia women will be able to scratch one item off their list of things to worry about: running out of birth control pills. Under the law, which passed its congressional review period this month, women will be able to get a year's supply of pills at once. Prescriptions for birth control pills typically have to be renewed every 30 or 90 days, potentially resulting in women missing scheduled pills. The yearlong provision will begin in 2017. The Associated Press: Utah Unveils Tool Showing Impact Of Federal Budget Crisis
Lawwmakers worried about Utah's reliance on U.S. government funds unveiled an online calculator Thursday that shows how the state would be hit by various federal budget disasters like a shutdown. ... The calculator comes with several built-in scenarios that the commission says are "extreme but possible," such as broad federal spending cuts and or deep slashes to Medicaid money. On the website, the public can access a slimmed down version of a more sophisticated tool that legislative budget staff can use. (Price, 9/24)

The Kansas Health Institute News Service: Mental Health Advocates Question 72-Hour Involuntary Hold Proposal
Several advocates for people with mental illness on Wednesday panned a proposal that would allow treatment facilities to hold people in crisis situations for up to 72 hours as involuntary patients. "This is a deprivation of liberty," Mike Burgess, a spokesperson with the Disability Rights Center of Kansas, said during a meeting of the Kansas Mental Health Coalition. It would be better, he said, to expand access to voluntary treatment. (Ranney, 9/24)

Health News Florida: Orlando Health To 5,000 Patients: Redo Mammograms
Orlando Health mailed letters today to more than 5,300 patients who may have gotten bad mammograms. Women who went to the Boston Diagnostic Imaging location on Orange Avenue from May of 2013 to July of 2015 are asked to call Orlando Health. It's unclear why the Boston Diagnostic center has lost its accreditation, but Orlando Health bought the center last December. (Aboraya, 9/24)

Health News Florida: Isolation Increases Florida's Rural Suicide Rates
Florida's rural counties are seeing suicide rates for youth almost double that of the state's large cities. And experts say isolation, poverty, access to firearms and a lack of mental health resources are to blame. ... the teen suicide rate in Florida's small towns has doubled in the past 20 years. From 2012 through 2014, almost 8,000 youth younger than 21 killed themselves in Florida. Of those, 520 come from rural communities -- a significant number given their populations. Also, experts say the number of teen suicides could be much higher, in part because medical examiners and law enforcement don't have an objective set of criteria to decide whether to label a death as suicide. The Associated Press: Chiropractor Says Iowa Officials Wrong About Payment Rules
A chiropractor accused of improper Medicaid billings says Iowa officials are wrong about coverage eligibility for some conditions. Prosecutors said Thursday that Elizabeth Kressin, of Spencer, had submitted improper claims for more than seven years for what the prosecutors said were medically unnecessary chiropractic procedures for which payments weren't allowed. They include bed wetting, colic and ear infections. (9/25)

The Associated Press: Survey Shows Big Drop In Uninsured Nevada Kindergartners
An annual health survey of Nevada kindergartners shows a big drop in the percentage of children without health insurance, a change that researchers attribute to more use of Medicaid benefits. The seventh annual report from the Nevada Institute for Children's Research and Policy at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, showed 7.6 percent of kindergartners were uninsured last school year, down from 12.6 percent a year earlier. The Charlotte Observer: New Charlotte VA Center Will Expand Veterans Health Care In Region
Charlotte's new Veterans Affairs Health Care Center won't open officially for more than six months. ... The Charlotte site is one of seven new VA health centers approved by Congress in 2010. The Salisbury hospital region is one of the fastest growing in the country, said VA spokesman Barthalomew Major. An estimated 140,000 veterans live in the Charlotte metropolitan area, about 60,000 in Mecklenburg County alone. Although the number of veterans nationwide is declining, the number of veterans enrolled in the VA health-care system in increasing, Major said. Over the past 10 years, the number of VA patients nationwide has increased by 23 percent, but in the Salisbury region, the increase has been 66 percent, he said. (Garloch, 9/24)

HEALTH POLICY RESEARCH

16. Research Roundup: Economics Of Chronic Care; State-Run Marketplaces

Each week, KHN compiles a selection of recently released health policy studies and briefs.

Annals of Internal Medicine: Medicare Chronic Care Management Payments And Financial Returns To Primary Care Practices--A Modeling Study
Physicians have traditionally been reimbursed for face-to-face visits. A new non–visit-based payment for chronic care management (CCM) of Medicare patients took effect in January 2015. ... If nonphysician staff were to deliver CCM services, net revenue to practices would increase despite opportunity and staffing costs. Practices could expect approximately $332 per enrolled patient per year... if CCM services were delivered by registered nurses (RNs), approximately $372 ... if services were delivered by licensed practical nurses, and approximately $385 ... if services were delivered by medical assistants. ... At a minimum, 131 Medicare patients ... must enroll for practices to recoup the salary and overhead costs of hiring a full-time RN to provide CCM services. (Basu et al., 9/22)

The Commonwealth Fund: The Experiences of State-Run Marketplaces That Use HealthCare.gov
This brief explores the experiences of four states—Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, and Oregon—that established their own exchanges but have operated them with support from the federal HealthCare.gov eligibility and enrollment platform. Drawing on discussions with policymakers, insurers, and brokers, we examine how these supported state-run marketplaces perform their key functions. We find that this model may offer states the ability to maximize their influence over their insurance markets, while limiting the financial risk of running an exchange. (Giovannelli and Lucia, 9/17)

The Kaiser Family Foundation: Serving Low-Income Seniors Where They Live: Medicaid's Role In Providing Community-Based Long-Term Services And Supports
To better understand the low-income population with [long-term services and supports] LTSS needs, including those covered by Medicaid and those who are not, this issue brief examines the need for LTSS among seniors who live in the community and need LTSS. We use the 2011 National Health and Aging Trends Study (NHATS) to examine rates of need for LTSS and detail the characteristics of seniors who need these services. Throughout the brief, we compare dual eligible beneficiaries to low-income seniors without Medicaid. We also examine a third group, higher income seniors without Medicaid, to understand the role of income. Because LTSS needs increase with age, we also examine differences by age. (Garfield, 9/18)

National Governors Association: Using Data To Better Serve The Most Complex Patients: Highlights From NGA's Intensive Work With Seven States
[C]omplex care patients, sometimes referred to as super-utilizers, have comorbid and often serious conditions. ... such conditions often span both physical and behavioral health and are often further complicated by social factors, such as housing instability, poverty, or limited education. ... complex care patients represent only a small proportion (5 percent) of [Medicaid] beneficiaries but account for more than half of program costs. ... the National Governors Association has worked with several states to develop statewide [data] initiatives for improving the management of care for super-utilizers .... The following lessons learned can help state leaders ...: Understand the characteristics of complex populations. ... Identify and target specific patients. ... Ensure effective management and evaluation. (Isasi, 9/23)

Here is a selection of news coverage of other recent research:

Reuters: Americans Overpaying Hugely For Cancer Drugs - Study
Americans are paying way over the odds for some modern cancer drugs, with pharmaceutical companies charging up to 600 times what the medicines cost to make, according to an independent academic study. The United States also pays more than double the price charged in Europe for these drugs - so-called tyrosine kinase inhibitors (TKIs), a potent class of cancer pills with fewer side effects than chemotherapy. The analysis by pharmacologist Andrew Hill of Britain's University of Liverpool, who will present his findings at the Sept. 25-29 European Cancer Congress in Vienna, is likely to fuel a growing storm over U.S. drug costs. (Hirschler, 9/22)

The Philadelphia Inquirer/Health Day: ERs Often 'Safety Net' Care For People With Schizophrenia: CDC
A new report finds that, too often, under-medicated Americans suffering from schizophrenia end up seeking care in the nation's hospital emergency rooms. The report, issued Wednesday by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, found that between 2009 and 2011, over 382,000 visits to ERs were recorded for people aged 18 to 64 with schizophrenia. Reuters: Weight-Loss Surgery May Not Increase Health Costs For Diabetes
Weight loss surgery may be a cost-effective way of lowering blood sugar for many diabetics, not just those who are severely obese, a Swedish study suggests. Researchers found that for people with diabetes, total healthcare costs did not rise in the years following weight-loss surgery, largely because of overall savings from less use of healthcare and medications. (Rapaport, 9/23)

Reuters: A Text Message A Day May Keep The Doctor Away
Texting patients regular reminders to do things like eat right, exercise more and smoke less may help them make lifestyle changes linked to a lower risk of heart attacks and strokes, an Australian study suggests. Researchers sent four texts a week to about 350 people with heart disease to supplement their regular care with reminders designed to encourage healthier habits. Another group of about 350 patients stuck with their usual care routines but didn't receive texts. (9/23)

The New York Times: Consumers Are Embracing Full-Fat Foods
Public health authorities have long urged Americans to cut back on foods high in saturated fat like butter, meat and whole milk. But a new report on dietary-fat consumption suggests that the public is increasingly eating more, not less, of these foods. The new report, which was published last week by the Credit Suisse Research Institute, found that sales of butter in the United States rose 14 percent last year and climbed another 6 percent in the first three months of 2015. Sales of whole milk rose 11 percent in the first half of this year, while skim milk purchases fell 14 percent. The report also predicted that consumption of red meat and eggs would climb in the coming years. (O'Connor, 9/23)

Reuters: Telehealth Visits May Be An Option After Surgery
People may happily, and safely, forgo in-person doctors' visits after surgery by opting instead for talking with their surgeons by phone or video, suggests a small study of U.S. veterans. Most patients preferred the virtual visits and the doctors didn't miss any infections that popped up after surgery, the researchers report in JAMA Surgery. (Seaman, 9/23)

Medscape: Many Poor Kids With Mental Illness Miss Out On Benefits
A "sizable" number of US children with mental disorders who are from low-income households do not receive federal benefits under the Social Security Administration's Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program, according to a new report from the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, in Washington, DC. However, the number of these children who are receiving SSI funds is growing at a pace consistent with the mental health trends in the general population, the report indicates. (Brooks, 9/21)

Medscape: DNR After In-Hospital Cardiac Arrest May Not Match Prognosis
Among patients who had an in-hospital cardiac arrest and successful restoration of spontaneous circulation, do-not-resuscitate (DNR) orders were generally issued quickly and reflected predicted prognosis, a new study reports. However, the study, which was published in the September 22/29, 2015 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, also identified room for improvement. (Busko, 9/23)

EDITORIALS AND OPINIONS

17. Viewpoints: Pinning Blame For A Possible Shutdown; Medicare Should Help On Drug Prices

A selection of opinions on health care from around the country.

Los Angeles Times: Are Democrats Actually The Ones Trying To Shut Down The Government?
So, who's trying to shut down the government, Democrats or Republicans? The answer, naturally, depends on whom you ask. ... But another way, it was Republicans who decided to tie the continued operation of government to the question of whether Planned Parenthood should receive Medicaid dollars. They took the hostage, they're responsible for the consequences. Feel free to debate the merits of Planned Parenthood all you like, but this fight isn't new. The recent videos didn't seem to persuade any of the organization's supporters in Congress to flip to the other side. So the outcome Thursday wasn't just predictable, it was a certainty. (Jon Healey, 9/24)

The Washington Post's Plum Line: Government Shutdown Fight May Again Shake Up GOP Presidential Race

With the big news out of Congress today the warm welcome received by Pope Francis, one might forget that our nation's august legislature is headed for yet another government shutdown, this time over Republican demands that the government cut off all funding for Planned Parenthood, most of which comes in the form of Medicaid reimbursements for women's health care. This comes at a particularly inopportune time for Republicans. Just when it was starting to look like their chaotic presidential primary might be heading to a more sane place, the shutdown controversy threatens to drag it backwards, boosting the candidates the party fears most. (Paul Waldman, 9/24)

The Washington Post's The Fix: Donald Trump Just Went After Martin Shkreli. Why In The World Isn't The Rest Of The GOP?

Jumping into the prescription drug debate could help elevate those candidates' plans, because prescription drug prices is one of the few health-care issues where Americans agree that the status quo needs to change. In fact, 76 percent of Americans said dealing with prescription drug prices should be Washington's No. 1 health-care priority, according to an April poll from the Kaiser Family Foundation. ... GOP front-runner Donald Trump is regularly praised by liberal leaders, such as Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) and New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D), for his call to raise taxes on the wealthy. Want to out-Trump Trump? Why not start talking about an issue that matters deeply to so many Americans? (Amber Phillips, 9/24)

Huffington Post: Top LGBT Group Wants Congress To Investigate Drug Company That Proposed Massive Price Hike

One of the nation's highest-profile LGBT advocacy organizations has joined the calls for Congress to investigate Turing Pharmaceuticals, the company that recently sparked a national backlash when it proposed hiking the price of a critical anti-infection drug. On Wednesday, The Huffington Post has learned, the Human Rights Campaign sent letters to the chairmen of three key House committees with jurisdiction over health care and the drug industry. In the letters, the organization calls upon the committees to investigate Turing's recent announcement that it would raise the price of drug called Daraprim, a treatment for toxoplasmosis, from $13.50 to $750 a tablet. (Jonathan Cohn, 9/24)

The Philadelphia Inquirer: A 5,455 Percent Price Increase? Expect More Of It

After Pope Francis's visit to the U.S., possibly the biggest news item this week has been the depraved price increase that Turing Pharmaceuticals posted for its drug, Daraprim. Although the 5,455 percent that Turing hiked Daraprim's price is astounding, the absolute daily price is less than that of many other drugs and the practice of gouging prices on specialty drugs is consistent with practices across the industry. (Daniel R. Hoffman, 9/24)

Bloomberg: Let Medicare Tackle High Drug Costs

Yes, the U.S. pays 40 percent more for drugs than other countries do, and last year those costs rose 12.6 percent. But the increase is expected to slow, and drugs still account for just 10 cents of every dollar Americans spend on health care. What has rightly made drug costs a political issue, however, are the astronomical prices of a few specialty medicines. ... The best strategy to push down such prices -- the one endorsed by [Hillary] Clinton and one of her rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination, Bernie Sanders -- is to give Medicare, which pays for 29 percent of all U.S. prescription drug purchases, the ability to negotiate prices with drugmakers. That Medicare doesn't already do this is Congress's fault. (9/24)

Tribune News Service: Patients Win As Larger Insurers Seek To Cut Costs With Better Service

The planned mergers of several of America's largest health insurers Aetna combining with Humana, and Anthem with Cigna is almost certain to be good for the insurers, reducing overhead and improving their bargaining position as they attempt to negotiate better rates with providers. But what's in it for you and me? The answer may surprise you: In all likelihood, the mergers will lead to better medical care at lower costs. (Jon Kaplan, 9/24)

The Washington Post: Want To Fight Poverty? Expand Access To Contraception.

Pope Francis's visit has brought renewed attention to some of our nation's toughest economic challenges: inequality, poverty and income (im)mobility. These are pressing issues that leaders of both political parties say they want to tackle, but they disagree on useful, or even acceptable, policy tools. I have a humble suggestion for an antipoverty policy that, if framed correctly, could appeal to both left and right (though probably not Francis). That policy: better access to contraception. (Catherine Rampell, 9/24)

Forbes: Utah Proposes Tax On The Sick To Pay For Obamacare Medicaid Expansion

After the legislature blocked his Obamacare Medicaid expansion plans in 2014 and 2015, Utah Governor Gary Herbert (R) began working with legislative leaders to negotiate some kind of "compromise" to expand the program to more than 100,000 able-bodied adults. Although the deal is being negotiated in secret, some details have been leaked to the public. According to the few specifics made public, the biggest component of the negotiated framework is to levy a new "assessment" on medical providers in Utah to help pay for the state's share of expansion. But the so-called assessment is simply a new Obamacare tax on the sick that will not only raise health care costs for all Utahns, but add significantly to the national debt. (Nic Horton, Jonathan Ingram and Josh Archambault, 9/24)

The Washington Post's Wonkblog: We Must Act On Global Health Because Millions Of Lives Are At Stake

The report made a strong case that the benefits of the right health investments far exceed the costs. Indeed, I believe the moral and economic case for investments in health care--both prevention and treatment--is as or more compelling than in any other area in the developing world. The dramatic declines in child mortality and increases in life expectancy demonstrate that policy can make an immense difference. (Lawrence Summers, 9/24)

Bloomberg: Pope Moves The Needle In U.S. Politics

Pope Francis hasn't changed any church policies on economics, social justice, war, abortion or gay marriage. As if to underscore that point, on Wednesday he visited the Little Sisters of the Poor, which took the U.S. government to court to fight a requirement that religious organizations cover birth control in the health insurance they provide to employees. Yet in his emphasis on the plight of the poor, immigrants and the environment, this pope has changed the Catholic Church's tone and rebalanced its priorities. That bothers conservative activists in the U.S., where the Catholic hierarchy for three decades has largely been identified with Republicans and the culture wars because of its stress on abortion and gay marriage. (Albert R. Hunt, 9/24)

The New England Journal of Medicine: Physician Payment After The SGR — The New Meritocracy

The “doc fix” — a permanent replacement for the unworkable sustainable growth rate formula (SGR) enacted in 1997 for calculating Medicare's physician fees — had been a long time coming .... At the heart of the legislation is the new Merit-Based Incentive Payment System (MIPS), which replaces the Physician Value-Based Payment Modifier to move physician payment under Medicare further into the territory of value-based purchasing. ... When it is implemented, the MIPS will become the largest physician pay-for-performance scheme in the world and the first to create a single value-based purchasing framework covering the full spectrum of physician specialties. This new meritocracy will need to be flexible enough to account for the heterogeneous practice styles of the professionals who care for Medicare beneficiaries and the settings in which they work. (Meredith B. Rosenthal, 9/24)

The New England Journal of Medicine: Leap Of Faith — Medicare's New Physician Payment System

These changes mark a new era, in which Medicare offers powerful incentives for physicians to participate in ACOs and other innovative payment and delivery models. ... This revamping reflects a broader movement in U.S. health care toward paying for medical services on the basis of value rather than volume — a movement built on the prevailing view in the health policy community that cost-containment efforts can succeed only if we move away from fee-for-service payment. But there are several important problems with this belief and the reforms it inspires. (Jonathan Oberlander and Miriam J. Laugesen, 9/24)

3. CMS Releases Star Ratings For 2016 Medicare Advantage Plans

Almost three out of four beneficiaries are enrolled in medical and drug coverage plans that received at least a four-star quality rating, according to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. The rankings did show a drop for some companies, especially in regard to prescription drug benefits.

Modern Healthcare: Medicare Advantage Star Ratings Reveal Mix Of High, Low Performers
More Medicare Advantage plans nabbed top quality marks for their 2016 plans than last year, a potential sign that private insurers are trying to meet the federal government's standards for high-quality products and coordinated healthcare for seniors. But the CMS' star ratings, released Thursday, also showed that private Medicare plans are still failing on many levels, particularly when it comes to prescription drug benefits. (Herman, 10/8)

Meanwhile, 2016 Medicare Part D premiums will rise for many -

Reuters: Unwelcome News About Medicare's Rising Drug Costs
Seniors have received some unpleasant news in their mailboxes in recent weeks: premiums for many Medicare prescription drug insurance plans will rise at double-digit rates next year. Premiums for the ten most popular Medicare Part D prescription drug plans (PDPs) will rise an average of 8 percent next year - the fastest clip in five years, according to Avalere Health, a consulting and research firm. And five of the top plans will boost their average premiums anywhere from 16 percent to 26 percent. (Miller, 10/8)

HEALTH LAW ISSUES AND IMPLEMENTATION

4. Insurers Seeking More Obamacare Aid Could Wait Years

Insurers who hoped to get billions in aid after opening-year losses from their participation in the health law's insurance marketplaces are only getting 12.6 percent of what they requested after the fund to pay them fell short. In the meantime, Obamacare dropouts get picked up by employer coverage in California, and Wyoming loses one of its two health law insurers.

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette: Affordable Care Act Aid Could Take Years To Reach Insurers
Health insurers that lost millions of dollars last year under the Affordable Care Act may wait years for the government to deliver the aid it promised them. Companies, including Downtown-based insurer Highmark, want about $2.87 billion to help cover their first-year losses from online insurance marketplaces — a centerpiece of the landmark health care law. But a federal relief program meant to limit their risk is more than $2 billion short, leaving the companies to collect only 12.6 percent of those requests late this year, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services said this month. (Smeltz, 10/8)

Los Angeles Times: Many Obamacare Dropouts In California Picked Up Employer Coverage, State Says

Nearly half of the estimated 700,000 Californians who have dropped their Obamacare policies during the past two years have enrolled in an employer-based plan, a new report from the Covered California exchange shows. In a news conference Thursday, Peter Lee, the organization's executive director, said there were about 1.3 million Californians enrolled in the exchange's plans as of June 30. That was about two-thirds of the 2 million who have enrolled in the exchange since it opened Oct. 1, 2013. (Sisson, 10/8)

The Associated Press: Wyoming Loses 1 Of Its 2 Affordable Care Act Insurers

One of the two companies offering health insurance coverage in Wyoming under the federal health care law has decided to drop out of the program after receiving word that the federal government would be providing drastically less financial help than it expected. The news comes as state leaders debate whether the federal government can be trusted to help pay for expansion of a health insurance program for the working poor. (Moen, 10/8)

The Associated Press: New Health Insurance Plan Sparks Debate In New Jersey

Two New Jersey senators have asked the state attorney general to delay the biggest health insurer in the state from offering a set of insurance plans that are being sold as money-saving ways to cover health care. Critics fear the Horizon Blue Cross Blue Shield plans could hurt some patients and hospitals. Democratic Sens. Nia Gill and Joseph Vitale say the state should first set up a way to oversee how health insurers rate health care providers when they set up tiered systems. Here's a look at the issue. Colorado's cooperative insurance plan faces an uncertain future over cost concerns, and a patient advocacy group rates California's best HMO and PPO plans --

The Associated Press: Low-Cost Health Insurer In Colorado Faces Uncertain Future

Colorado's biggest nonprofit health insurer faces an uncertain future, and its 80,000 or so customers don't know whether their insurer will be able to offer new polices when next year's enrollment period begins soon. Colorado HealthOP, which emerged from the Affordable Care Act, faces possible insolvency because the U.S. government said it won't be able to cover payments to help stabilize premiums in federal insurance markets. Los Angeles Times: California Agency Ranks Kaiser As Best HMO, Anthem And Cigna As Best PPOs

Kaiser Permanente was the highest-rated HMO and Anthem Blue Cross and Cigna the top-rated PPOs in a new state report. The California Office of the Patient Advocate

released ratings Wednesday of 10 HMOs, six PPOs and more than 200 medical groups, just as Californians prepare to choose their health plans for next year from their employers or Covered California, the state's Obamacare exchange. (Pfeifer, 10/8)

5. Bill Would Require Drug, Device Makers To Disclose Pay To Nurses, Physician Assistants

The legislation, introduced in the Senate, would close a loophole in the law that requires public disclosure of such payments to doctors and some other health providers.

ProPublica: Bill Would Add Nurses, Physician Assistants To Pharma Payments Database
A bill proposed Wednesday by two U.S. senators would require drugmakers and medical device manufacturers to publicly disclose their payments to nurse practitioners and physician assistants for promotional talks, consulting, meals and other interactions. The legislation would close a loophole in the Physician Payment Sunshine Act, which requires companies to report such payments to doctors, dentists, chiropractors, optometrists and podiatrists. Companies have so far released more than 15 million payment records, covering August 2013 to December 2014. (Ornstein, 10/8)

And on prices for medical services -

Kaiser Health News: Medical Prices Higher In Areas Where Large Doctor Groups Dominate, Study Finds
Prices for many common medical procedures are higher in areas where physicians are concentrated into larger practice groups, according to a new study. The October Health Affairs study examined the average county prices paid by preferred provider insurance organizations in 2010. It focused on 15 high-volume, high-cost medical procedures across a variety of specialties, including vasectomy, laparoscopic appendectomy, colonoscopy with lesion removal, nasal septum repair, cataract removal and knee replacement. The prices studied reflected the negotiated prices between the PPOs and the physician groups, including payments made by both the plan and the patient. The average price ranged from $2,301 for a total knee replacement to $576 for a vasectomy. (Andrews, 10/9)

6. Med Schools Trying To Adapt To New Health Care Environment

With a revolution in U.S. health care -- in both how care is delivered and paid for -- schools that train doctors are scrambling to revamp. Also, a Michigan paper examines the burden on nurses at an understaffed state hospital, and a study analyzes patient attitudes about being discharged from the hospital.

The Washington Post: A Different Kind Of Care Package
U.S. health care is in a revolution that is starting to shake up one of the most conservative parts of medicine: its antiquated model for training doctors. Once paid a la carte for the procedures and services they perform, physicians are beginning to be reimbursed for keeping their patients healthy. ... The AMA is worried enough about the problem that it has been giving out millions of dollars to prod new kinds of teaching, in the hope that doctors' training can adapt as quickly as the system they will soon join. The Lansing State Journal: Michigan Mental Health Nurses Say OT Hurts Patient Care

The well-being of some 700 patients in state psychiatric hospitals is in the hands of nurses who say they're overworked, overtired and overstressed because of excessively mandated double shifts. Sometimes several days a week, nurses in Michigan's five state-run hospitals end their regular eight-hour shifts only to be ordered to cover staffing shortages by working another eight hours. Against the recommendations of nursing groups and one of the state's own task forces, several current and former nurses at the Michigan Department of Health & Human Services told the State Journal they're worked to the point of exhaustion and ragged nerves, more prone to errors or poor judgment as they deal with unpredictable, sometimes violent patients. Reuters: Patients Who Feel Ready To Leave The Hospital Are More Satisfied
In a small study of hospitilized patients, those who felt ready to go home when they were discharged were more satisfied with the hospital and their caregivers than those who didn't feel ready to go. 7. House Panel Finds No Financial Wrongdoing By Planned Parenthood, Rep. Chaffetz Says

Chairman of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah) says his committee's hearings have not found that the reproductive health organization is improperly handling its finances. He says investigations may continue. At a hearing yesterday, a former employee said that Planned Parenthood did bill Medicaid for abortion services. The woman made similar claims in a lawsuit that in 2014 an Iowa appeals court said did not have enough evidence to go forward.

The Huffington Post: GOP Probe Into Planned Parenthood Funding Comes Up Empty
Rep. Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah), chairman of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee, said Thursday [during a Judiciary Committee hearing] that the GOP's investigation into Planned Parenthood's use of federal funds hasn't turned up anything. ... Chaffetz said Thursday that he still supports digging into Planned Parenthood's activities, even if they're using their money appropriately. "I think there will continue to be investigations," he said. (Bendry, 10/8)

The Hill: Planned Parenthood Billed Medicaid For Abortion Services, Ex-Employee

Claims

A former Planned Parenthood employee told lawmakers Thursday that she had firsthand knowledge that the organization has billed the federal government for abortion-related ultrasounds and medications, in violation of federal law. Susan Thayer, who spent 17 years working as a clinic manager for Planned Parenthood in Iowa, told lawmakers Thursday that the group had overbilled Medicaid by about $28 million, reasserting claims that have been the subject of a drawn-out court battle in Iowa. ... an appeals court in Iowa ruled in fall 2014 that Thayer did not have detailed enough evidence to accuse Planned Parenthood of submitting false claims. 8. From Planned Parenthood To Obamacare: Speaker Race Will Impact Key Health Care Issues, Funding

House Republicans will meet Friday morning to discuss next steps in electing a leader following Rep. Kevin McCarthy's surprise withdrawal from the race Thursday. Rep. Paul Ryan has resisted recruitment appeals so far.

The New York Times: Republicans To Meet Amid Turmoil After Kevin McCarthy's Exit From Speaker Race

House Republicans will meet Friday morning at the Capitol to begin charting a path forward after Representative Kevin McCarthy of California's stunning withdrawal from the race for speaker dashed expectations of an orderly succession and threw Congress deeper into turmoil. The struggle to restore order to their leadership comes as they confront major fiscal issues with rapidly approaching deadlines, and Republican leaders are casting about for a candidate for speaker who can both bring along restive conservatives and maintain the backing of the far larger ranks of the rest of their conference. 9. Ariz. Weighs Medicaid Work Requirement, But HHS Has Rejected That For Other States

Arizona has already expanded its Medicaid program, but lawmakers there want to set tougher standards for those who are eligible. News outlets also report on the wait in Montana for the federal government to consider the state's expansion plans and a controversial statement by an aide to the Kansas governor.

Stateline: Should Medicaid Recipients Have To Work?
If Arizona gets its way, its able-bodied, low-income adults will face the toughest requirements in the country to receive health care coverage through Medicaid. Most of the those Medicaid recipients and new applicants would have to have a job, be looking for one or be in job training to qualify for the joint federal-state program for the poor. They would have to contribute their own money to health savings accounts .... Some of Arizona's proposals have been made in other states, and the federal government has signed off on them. It has rejected work requirements, however. (Ollove, 10/8)

The Great Falls Tribune: Waiting For Medicaid Costly To Some Montanans
Holly Blouch wants to be working, and she wants to be healthy. But right now, it's almost impossible to do both. Diagnosed with carcinoid disorder eight years ago, Blouch needed to work to have health insurance to pay for her medical care, which will some day involve needing a kidney transplant. But she can't work enough hours to keep medical insurance because of her health. "There are a lot of people out there like me," said the 37-year-old Kalispell woman. She's referring to herself and the 69,999 other Montanans who now qualify for Medicaid coverage after the Montana Legislature approved the expansion plan this year. But she's got to wait a little while longer to get that coverage while the federal government reviews Montana's waiver application. (Cates, 10/8)

Wichita Eagle: Governor's Press Office Calls Medicaid Expansion 'Morally Reprehensible'
Gov. Sam Brownback's press office blasted Medicaid expansion as an "Obamacare ruse" in an e-mail to supporters Tuesday, signaling that the governor won't back expansion anytime soon. Melika Willoughby, the governor's deputy director of communications, pushed back against the claim that the state's refusal to expand Medicaid helped cause the closure of Mercy Hospital in Independence. "Those who say Medicaid Expansion would save the Independence Hospital are lying. It wouldn't," Willoughby said in an e-mail to the governor's supporters. "Instead, this Obamacare ruse funnels money to big city hospitals, creates a new entitlement class, and fails to rightly prioritize service for disabled citizens." (Lowry, 10/7)

Los Angeles Times: Blue Shield's Deal With Regulators On $1.2-Billion Acquisition Draws Fire
Beleaguered insurer Blue Shield of California won state approval for its $1.2-billion acquisition of a Medicaid health plan, but the nonprofit company's deal with regulators drew heavy criticism. The California Department of Managed Health Care said it extracted several key concessions from Blue Shield in an agreement unveiled Thursday. 10. Big Pharmaceutical Companies Withhold Support Of Trans-Pacific Trade Deal

Negotiators struck a compromise on the major issue of patent protections for biologics and vaccines that left no party completely happy.

The Wall Street Journal: Business Groups Withholding TPP Support On Lack Of Details
Major U.S. business groups, citing internal frictions and uncertainty over the details of President Barack Obama's 12-nation Pacific trade deal, are withholding their support for now, hobbling the administration's early efforts to win congressional backing. With big pharmaceutical companies and several other major industries disappointed by the Trans-Pacific Partnership, the broader business coalitions that have long backed the talks say they first must consult with their members. NPR: TPP Negotiators Reached Agreement With Sticky Compromise On Biologics Drugs
A big sticking point in the negotiations over the Trans-Pacific Partnership involved biologics medicines and vaccines created from living organisms. The dispute centered on patent protection: how many years drug companies should have before facing competition from generics. The negotiators ended up with a complicated compromise that gives drug makers five to eight years of protection. But nobody is really happy with the outcome. (Zarroli, 10/8)

11. Biotech Stock Poised For Big Gain Or Big Fall

One Wall Street analyst says there's no middle ground forward for investment in biotech firms, whose products are becoming the focus of scrutiny after big price hikes. Elsewhere, a new multiple sclerosis drug from Roche shows promise, and there's news on a takeover bid by Blackstone and an impending sale by Clayton, Dubilier & Rice of a drug-compounding firm.

The Wall Street Journal: Biotechs Are A 'Strong Buy' Or 'Strong Sell,' Wall Street Strategist Says
Biotechnology stocks can't catch a break. And one Wall Street strategist says the volatile price action recently has him expecting one of two things: A sharp turnaround or a deeper plunge. "The group isn't a 'Buy' or 'Sell' here – it is either 'Strong Buy' or 'Strong Sell,'" wrote Nicholas Colas, chief market strategist at brokerage Convergex. Biotechs have long been a volatile sector, well outperforming the large-cap S&P index

The Wall Street Journal: Roche's MS Drug Reports Promising Results
Roche Holding AG's Genentech unit said its experimental drug ocrelizumab proved effective in three late-stage studies against multiple sclerosis, potentially heralding an important new treatment option for the debilitating disease. In two of the studies, which included 1,656 patients with relapsing multiple sclerosis, the most common form of the condition, ocrelizumab proved superior to the commonly used drug, Rebif, in reducing the annual rate of relapse of major symptoms and other measures of the status of the disease, Roche said. Bloomberg: Blackstone To Acquire BioMed Realty Trust For $4.8B
Blackstone Group agreed to buy landlord BioMed Realty Trust Inc. for $4.8 billion, betting on growth in real estate demand from the life sciences and biotechnology industries. Shares of REITs have been battered this year as investors gird for the first interest-rate hike since 2006, creating opportunities for buyers like New York-based Blackstone to acquire companies relatively cheaply. Health-care spending is rising quickly in the United States, boosting demand for laboratory space that can accommodate pharmaceutical developers and manufacturers. (Callanan and Mulholland, 10/8)

12. Oncologists Skipping Expensive Cancer Drugs That Offer Little Or No Benefit

Meanwhile, news outlets report on other cancer care developments like the impact of life-expectancy questions on patients and what elephant genes could teach researchers about fighting the disease.

Reuters: Cancer Doctors Drop Pricey Drugs With Little Effect
U.S. oncologists, aware that patients are paying more of the costs of expensive cancer drugs, are increasingly declining to prescribe medicines that have scant or no effect, even as a last resort. At least half a dozen drugs, including colon cancer treatments Cyramza, from Eli Lilly & Co, and Stivarga, sold by Bayer AG, aren't worth prices that can exceed $100,000 a year, top cancer specialists said in interviews with Reuters. (Beasley, 10/8)

Reuters: Discussing Life Expectancy Gives Advanced Cancer Patients Realistic View

When doctors discuss prognosis with advanced cancer patients, those patients have more realistic views of their life expectancy and don't seem to experience a decrease in emotional wellbeing, according to a new study. "That the vast majority of cancer patients who are dying say that they want to know their prognosis seems surprisingly courageous," said senior author Holly G. Prigerson of Weill Cornell Medical College in New York City. (Doyle, 10/8)

Los Angeles Times: What Elephants Can Teach Scientists About Fighting Cancer In Humans

You've heard that elephants never forget, but did you know they almost never get cancer either? It turns out just 4.8% of known elephant deaths are related to cancer. For humans, cancer-related deaths are much higher — between 11% and 25%, scientists say. The low cancer rate among elephants is particularly intriguing because all things being equal, elephants should get more cancer than we do. (Netburn, 10/8)

13. Proposed Measure To Repeal California Vaccine Law Fails To Get Enough Signatures To Make Ballot

Also in California, Gov. Jerry Brown signs three bills aimed at limiting prescriptions of antipsychotics for foster children. Meanwhile, the Food and Drug Administration faces criticism for its continued approval of OxyContin for kids. And the growing heroin epidemic puts more minors into the state foster systems.

The Associated Press: Measure To Repeal California Vaccine Law Won't Be On Ballot

Proponents of an effort to repeal California's new stricter law requiring mandatory vaccines for schoolchildren failed to submit enough signatures to qualify a ballot initiative asking voters to repeal the law. County election clerks reported receiving fewer than 234,000 of the 366,000 signatures needed to ask California voters to repeal the law, according to figures provided to the secretary of state's office and posted online Thursday. The new state law struck down the state's personal belief exemption for immunizations, a move that requires nearly all public schoolchildren to be vaccinated. (Williams, 10/8)

NPR: California Approves Laws To Cut Use Of Antipsychotics In Foster Care

Efforts to protect children in foster care from being inappropriately medicated with powerful antipsychotic drugs got a big boost forward on Tuesday, when California Gov. CNN: Anti-Bullying Laws Appear To Be Working
Roughly 20% of high school students report being bullied at school in the past year, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and 15% of high school students said they were bullied online. That number has gone down significantly since the federal government started collecting data on the problem in 2005. A decade ago, 28% of students reported being bullied. Why? One reason is that anti-bullying laws seem to actually work. That's what a new study in JAMA Pediatrics suggests, although not all bullying laws are equally impactful. (Christensen, 10/8)

The New York Times: Eating Organic Lowers Pesticide Levels In Children

The Associated Press: Researcher: Children's Cancer Linked To Fukushima Radiation
A new study says children living near the Fukushima nuclear meltdowns have been diagnosed with thyroid cancer at a rate 20 to 50 times that of children elsewhere, a difference the authors contend undermines the government's position that more cases have been discovered in the area only because of stringent monitoring. Most of the 370,000 children in Fukushima prefecture (state) have been given ultrasound checkups since the March 2011 meltdowns at the tsunami-ravaged Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear plant. The most recent statistics, released in August, show that thyroid cancer is suspected or confirmed in 137 of those children, a number that rose by 25 from a year earlier. Elsewhere, the disease occurs in only about one or two of every million children per year by some estimates. (Kageyama, 10/8)

14. FDA Recognizes Salt As Generally 'Safe'; Advocacy Group Wants That Status Removed

In other public health news, researchers find that intense early intervention can lead to recovery for people diagnosed with schizophrenia.

McClatchy: Consumer Group Sues FDA For Inaction On Salt
A prominent consumer advocacy group sued the U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Thursday for failing to regulate the amount of salt in the nation's food supply. The Center for Science in the Public Interest wants the FDA to act on the group's 10-year-old petition to lift salt's status as "generally recognized as safe." Doing so would reclassify salt as a food additive, which subjects it to more stringent regulation, like limits on the amounts allowed in processed foods. The legal action is the latest chapter in the group's decades-long efforts to combat excessive sodium consumption. Eating too much salt can lead to high blood pressure, a major risk factor for heart disease, kidney failure and stroke. (Pugh, 10/8)

The Associated Press: Snyder Supports Switching Flint Water System Back To Detroit
Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder on Thursday called for Flint to switch back to Detroit's water system to address a public health emergency over lead and grapple with broader concerns about the effects of the aging pipes distributing the city's water supply. Flint stopped using water from the Detroit system last year as a cost-cutting measure, opting instead for a supply direct from the Flint River. But since the swap, residents have complained of the water's funky smell, taste and appearance, as well as adverse health reactions, and doctors discovered that the corrosive river water was drawing lead from aging pipes in some homes. A doctor who says she is "dedicated to the natural treatment of cancer" has been ordered to appear before the Florida Board of Medicine on Friday to explain the death of a toddler from an unapproved drug. Martha Grout MD, who left Florida 20 years ago after catching flak for her alternative methods, nevertheless holds a current Florida license. The incident occurred at her alternative medicine center in Scottsdale, Ariz., where she practices "homeopathy," a style of medicine that is not legal in Florida. (Gentry, 10/8)

The Associated Press: Petitions Filed To Allow Medical Marijuana Use In Missouri
The first step to put medical marijuana to a statewide vote next year came Thursday, with supporters filing initiative petitions with the Missouri secretary of state. The two petitions from pro-medical marijuana group New Approach Missouri, would ask voters whether to amend the state constitution to allow physicians to recommend the drug to patients with certain illnesses, such as cancer, epilepsy and post-traumatic stress disorder, as well as "any other chronic, debilitating or otherwise equivalent condition."

(Ballentine, 10/8)

St. Louis Public Radio: Effort Underway To Legalize Medical Marijuana Use In Missouri
Backers of medical marijuana want Missourians to decide if doctors can be allowed to prescribe the drug to critically ill patients. Two ballot initiatives that would do just that were filed on Thursday. Sheila Dundon of Columbia is a registered nurse and a breast cancer survivor. She says past cancer patients advised her to try marijuana to help curb the effects of chemotherapy. (Griffin, 10/8)

HEALTH POLICY RESEARCH

16. Research Roundup: Observation Care At VA; Meeting Charity Standards; Medicare Drug Plans

Each week, KHN compiles a selection of recently released health policy studies and briefs.

Health Affairs: Observation Rates At Veterans' Hospitals More Than Doubled During 2005–13, Similar To Medicare Trends
When neither inpatient admission nor prompt discharge is clearly indicated for a patient in the emergency department, physicians place the patient under observation in a hospital for diagnosis and treatment. The increasing prevalence of observation stays at hospitals reimbursed by Medicare is receiving considerable attention, but the prevalence remains unexplored in Veterans Health Administration (VHA) hospitals, which are subject to different payment policies. Using VHA data for fiscal years 2005–13, we identified trends and variations in observation rates across twenty-one Veteran Integrated Service Networks and 128 VHA hospitals nationwide. We found that observation rates across VHA hospitals more than doubled, from 6.5 percent to 13.8 percent, and that there was substantial variation across both Veteran Integrated Service Networks and hospitals. (Wright et al., 10/5)

Health Affairs: Connecticut's 'Money Follows The Person' Yields Positive Results For Transitioning People Out Of Institutions
[T]he federal Money Follows the Person Rebalancing Demonstration helps qualified individuals living in institutions make the transition to life in the community. The Connecticut Money Follows the Person program is an unusually rich source of data, with information on the 2,262 people who transitioned to the community under that state's program during 2008–14. ... for the majority of respondents who remained in the community, quality of life and life satisfaction improved significantly after transition, and they stayed high. About half of the participants visited hospitals or emergency departments after transition; however, only 14 percent had returned to an institution one year after transition. Predictors of reinstitutionalization included some not previously observed: mental health disability, difficulties with family members before transition, and not exercising choice and control in daily life. (Robison et al., 10/5)

Brookings: A Floor-And-Trade Proposal To Improve The Delivery Of Charity-Care Services By U.S. Nonprofit Hospitals

Many uninsured Americans rely on charity care provided by nonprofit hospitals, which receive substantial tax benefits in exchange for providing community benefits. In this discussion paper we show that the hospitals that receive the largest tax benefits tend to be located in wealthier communities, whereas the demand for uncompensated care is highest in poorer communities. To ameliorate this geographic mismatch between the supply of charity care and the demand for charity care, we propose a floor-and-trade system whereby nonprofit hospitals would be required to meet charity-care standards, either by providing care to local patients or by purchasing credits from other hospitals. The Kaiser Family Foundation: Medicare Part D At Ten Years: The 2015 Marketplace And Key Trends, 2006-2015

This report presents findings from an analysis of the Medicare Part D marketplace in 2015 and changes in features of the drug benefit offered by Part D plans since 2006. ... In 2015, more than 39 million Medicare beneficiaries are enrolled in Medicare drug plans. Since 2006, the share of Medicare beneficiaries enrolled in a Part D plan has increased from 53 percent to 72 percent of all eligible Medicare beneficiaries. ... The average Part D enrollee had a choice of 30 PDPs and 15 MA-PD plans in 2015. ... In 2015, most plans use five cost-sharing tiers: preferred and non-preferred tiers for generic drugs, preferred and non-preferred tiers for brand drugs, and a tier for specialty drugs. ... Cost sharing for brand-name drugs has been relatively stable in recent years. (Hoadley, Cubanski and Neuman, 10/5)

The Commonwealth Fund: U.S. Health Care From A Global Perspective: Spending, Use Of Services, Prices, And Health In 13 Countries

This analysis draws upon data from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development and other cross-national analyses to compare health care spending, supply, utilization, prices, and health outcomes across 13 high-income countries .... These data predate the major insurance provisions of the Affordable Care Act. In 2013, the U.S. spent far more on health care than these other countries. Higher spending appeared to be largely driven by greater use of medical technology and higher health care prices, rather than more frequent doctor visits or hospital admissions. In contrast, U.S. spending on social services made up a relatively small share of the economy relative to other countries. Despite spending more on health care, Americans had poor health outcomes, including shorter life expectancy and greater prevalence of chronic conditions. (Squires and Anderson, 10/8)

CDC's Preventing Chronic Disease Journal: Health Status of Older US Workers and Nonworkers, National Health Interview Survey, 1997–2011

Many US workers are increasingly delaying retirement from work .... We examined the association of older adults' health status with their employment/occupation and other characteristics. National Health Interview Survey data from 1997 through 2011 were pooled for adults aged 65 or older .... Employed older adults had better health outcomes than unemployed older adults. Physically demanding occupations had the lowest risk of poor health outcomes, suggesting a stronger healthy worker effect: service workers were at lowest risk of multiple functional limitations ... and blue-collar workers were at lowest risk of multimorbidity ... and multiple functional limitation .... A strong association exists between employment and health status in older adults beyond what can be explained by socioeconomic factors (eg, education, income) or health

behaviors (eg, smoking). (Kachan et al., 9/24)

Here is a selection of news coverage of other recent research:

The Wall Street Journal: How Economic Downturns May Be Good For Your Health
Economic downturns, it turns out, appear to be good for health, according to a study released this week by the National Bureau of Economic Research. The research by Christopher Ruhm, a professor at the University of Virginia, builds upon earlier studies looking at the impact of economic downturns on health. "There is considerable evidence that harmful behaviors–like heavy drinking and smoking–decrease in bad economic times, whereas health-enhancing activities such as exercise and social interactions increase," Mr. Ruhm said. (Sparshott, 10/7)

Reuters: Women Are Missing From HIV Drug Trials
Although women make up roughly half of the world's HIV cases, they remain largely excluded from clinical trials testing drugs, vaccines and potential cures for the virus, a research review confirms. In an analysis spanning several decades that included work done as recently as 2012, researchers found that women typically comprised about 11 percent of participants in trials investigating cures for HIV. Similarly, drug studies were only about 19 percent female and just 38 percent of vaccine trial subjects were women. (Rapaport, 10/2)

Reuters: Caring For Loved One With Alzheimer's May Be Most Stressful For Spouse
Caring for a loved one with Alzheimer's disease isn't easy under the best of circumstances, but it may be much more stressful for spouses and people who suffer from depression, a Finnish study suggests. Researchers followed 236 family caregivers of Alzheimer's patients for three years after the diagnosis. Caregiving appeared to be much more stressful for people who were married to the patients or who suffered from depression when the study began. (Rapaport, 10/2)

Reuters: Perceived Discrimination Linked To Smoking And Poor Diet
Feeling like the target of discrimination may increase a person's odds of harmful behaviors like smoking, eating fatty foods and getting less sleep, a study of African-Americans suggests. Researchers examined the connection between discrimination and these unhealthy habits among almost 5,000 African-American residents of the Jackson, Mississippi metropolitan area. (Rapaport, 10/8)

The Oregonian: Oregonians Billed By Out-Of-Network Health Providers At High Rates, Insurer Group Says
Patients who use health providers outside of their insurer's network can expect bills to be as much as 1,200 percent more than what those services would cost under Medicare, according to a new study from an insurer lobbying group. In Oregon, for instance, a session of computer-targeted radiation therapy to treat tumors costs, on average, $2,409. That's about six times the average Medicare reimbursement rate of $397 — a key benchmark for health care costs. (Budnick, 10/5)

The Wall Street Journal: Study: Attempted Suicide Rises After Weight-Loss Surgery
People who undergo surgery for weight loss are 50% more likely to attempt suicide after the operation than before it, according to a large Canadian study published

Wednesday in the journal JAMA Surgery. The popular procedures, which were performed nearly 200,000 times in the U.S. last year, result in significant weight loss for most patients and often bring about reductions in Type 2 diabetes, hypertension and sleep apnea as well. Many patients also report improved mood and self-esteem. But a small group experience a worsening of depression, substance abuse and eating disorders, past studies have found. (Beck, 10/7)

Reuters: Type Of Weight Loss Surgery Matters For Diabetes Remission
Diabetics considering weight-loss surgery to help send their disease into remission should opt for the most popular procedure, a gastric bypass, researchers suggest. In their study of different types of so-called bariatric surgeries, the biggest impact on diabetes remission was seen with gastric bypass, which can reduce the size of the stomach from about three pints to roughly the size of a shot glass. (Rapaport, 10/6)

The Associated Press: Gene Test Finds Which Breast Cancer Patients Can Skip Chemotherapy
Many women with early-stage breast cancer can skip chemotherapy without hurting their chances of beating the disease, a major new study has found. The 21-gene test accurately identified a group of women whose cancers are so likely to respond to hormone-blocking drugs that adding chemo would do little, if any, good while also exposing them to side effects and other risks, the researchers found. “You can’t do better than that,” says the study leader, Dr. Joseph Sparano of Montefiore Medical Center in New York. (Marchione, 10/3)

The New York Times: Heart Scan Can Fine-Tune Risk Estimate For Patients Considering Statins
Treatment guidelines suggest that nearly half of those over age 40 — nearly 50 million people in the United States — at least consider a cholesterol-lowering statin to reduce heart attack risk. But a new large study of people who had an inexpensive heart scan found that half of those who were statin candidates had no signs of plaque in their heart and very little chance of having a heart attack in the next decade. (Kolata, 10/5)

The Associated Press: Report: More US Hospitals Are Encouraging Breast-Feeding
Health officials say more hospitals are encouraging new mothers to breast-feed. A new report found more than two-thirds of hospitals in 2013 helped women start breast-feeding within an hour after birth. That's up from 44 percent six years earlier. Roughly 90 percent of hospitals teach moms breast-feeding techniques and how to recognize and respond to infant feeding cues. But only about a quarter refrain from giving infants breast milk alternatives — like formula or water — unless medically necessary. (Stobbe, 10/6)

EDITORIALS AND OPINIONS

17. Viewpoints: War Of Words On Kansas Medicaid; Sebelius' Legacy; Mental Health Care Reform

A selection of opinions on health care from around the country.

Huffington Post: This GOP Governor's Comments About The Poor Are Incredibly Revealing

Some Republicans want their party to stop bashing poor people as lazy and undeserving of public assistance. Sam Brownback, the conservative governor of Kansas, doesn't appear to be one of them. Brownback and his allies are in the middle of a major fight over Medicaid, the government-run health insurance program for the poor and disabled. ... And while conservatives who oppose the expansion sometimes rely exclusively on arguments about Medicaid's efficacy -- or perceived lack thereof -- Brownback has been putting his rhetorical emphasis elsewhere. On Tuesday, the governor's deputy communications director, Melika Willoughby, distributed a letter laying out in detail the heart of Brownback's argument -- namely, that expanding Medicaid would be "morally reprehensible" because it would help "able-bodied adults ... who choose not to work" and would send money to "big city hospitals." (Jonathan Cohn, 10/7)

Kansas City Star: Gov. Sam Brownback's Missive On Medicaid Expansion Was Wrong, Cruel And Divisive

Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback's office sent out one of its trademark propaganda pieces on Tuesday, this one on the subject of Medicaid expansion. In its effort to score political points, it maligns low-income Kansans and pits citizens with disabilities against the working poor. As with other recent messages, the email signed by the governor's deputy communications director, Melika Willoughby, is rife with inaccurate information. (10/6)

Kansas City Star: Gov. Sam Brownback Takes The Low Road On Medicaid Expansion

In Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback's world, expanding Medicaid eligibility to more low-income Kansans would create "new government entitlements" for "able-bodied adults" and benefit a small number of "big city hospitals." I'll say this for Melika Willoughby, the deputy communications director who penned that incendiary language in an email on behalf of the Brownback administration: She's got the code words down pat. ... By spewing this sort of vitriol, the governor's office is choosing to argue a complex issue with the lowest forms of talking points. (Barbara Shelly, 10/8)

Forbes: Three Major Problems Left By Sec. Sebelius' Legacy: Obamacare's Medicaid Expansion

While [former HHS Secretary Kathleen] Sebelius resigned in the shadow of a disastrous roll-out of healthcare.gov, her more damaging legacy is the temptation for state leaders to embrace a bigger welfare state and accept an injection of federal dollars funded by Medicare cuts and deficit spending. Medicaid expansion, like Obamacare, fails to deliver on its promises of quality health care that improves the health of enrollees. Even more troubling, ballooning Medicaid expansion costs threaten every other service and will trap millions in a cycle of dependency and poverty. (Tarren Bragdon, 10/7)

Deseret News: Let The People Decide On Medicaid Expansion

I listened with interest to Tuesday's Health Reform Task Force, where members of the Gang of Six presented their "Utah Access" plan for Medicaid expansion. This new proposal, built on the premise that health care providers should pay the majority of the state's expansion costs, did not go over well. Providers are upset, and they have a right to be. Most providers will see no economic benefit from Medicaid expansion. They should not have to pay more than any other Utahn to cover its costs. (Dan Liljenquist, 10/8)

Des Moines Register: Medicaid Savings Are Increasingly Suspect
Perhaps Gov. Terry Branstad thought he could quietly privatize Iowa's Medicaid program. Instruct a state agency to hand over administration to managed care companies, issue a few press releases about "modernization," quickly secure federal approval and hope no one raises a fuss. Except when 4.2 billion public dollars and health care for 560,000 Iowans are on the line, people eventually pay attention to the details. It doesn't take long to realize privatization makes no sense. (10/8)

The Wall Street Journal: Mass Shootings And A Mental-Health Disgrace
We all know how this plays out in Congress: a moment of silence on the House floor and a fraternal feeling of melancholy when the flag over the Capitol is lowered to half-staff. But that moment of silence will not heal the hearts of those who lost a loved one, and it will not stop the next tragedy. Here and now we need action; we need real change. That's why I've authored the Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act. The bill focuses resources and reform where they are most needed: to foster evidence-based care, fix the shortage of psychiatric hospital beds, empower patients and caregivers under HIPAA privacy laws, and help patients get treatment well before their illness spirals into crisis. (Rep. Tim Murphy, R-Penn.)

The New York Times: Getting The Diagnosis Wrong
Diagnostic accuracy is fiendishly difficult to measure precisely, but it is estimated that doctors get it wrong in one out of 10 to one out of 20 cases. Up until now, the focus of the patient safety movement has been on errors of medical treatment — incorrect medications or dosages, postoperative complications, hospital-acquired infections. But diagnostic errors — incorrect or delayed diagnoses — may be more common and potentially more deadly. The Institute of Medicine has taken up the subject, and its new report offers the chilling observation that nearly everyone will experience at least one diagnostic error in their lifetimes. (Ofri, 10/8)

Politico: Planned Parenthood's Cecile Richards Blasts GOP 'Total Lack Of Civility'
Cecile Richards, the president of Planned Parenthood, says she was "stunned by the total lack of civility and use of raw power" by Republican members of Congress during last week's House Oversight and Government Reform hearing on her organization's federal funding, Richards fired back at Congress and Republicans in general in a Guardian article published Thursday, warning that the Supreme Court's 1973 decision in Roe v. Wade is "on the ballot" for next year's presidential election. (Nick Gass, 10/8)

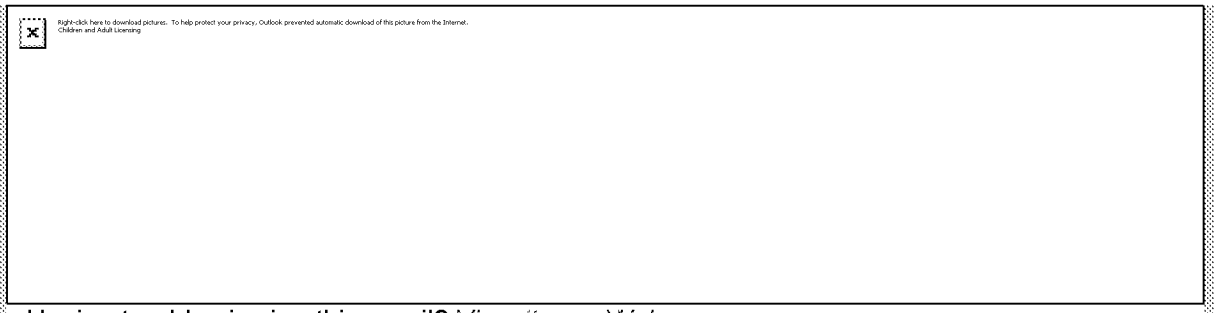
Subject: Flint Drinking Water Action Plan



Having trouble viewing this email? View it as a Web page.

On Friday, October 2, 2015, Gov. Rick Snyder announced a comprehensive action plan created with state, federal and city leaders to address concerns about Flint drinking water so that residents have access to safe, clean, water now and long into the future. The water leaving Flint's drinking water system is safe to drink, but some families with lead plumbing in their homes or service connections could experience higher levels of lead in the water that comes out of their faucets.

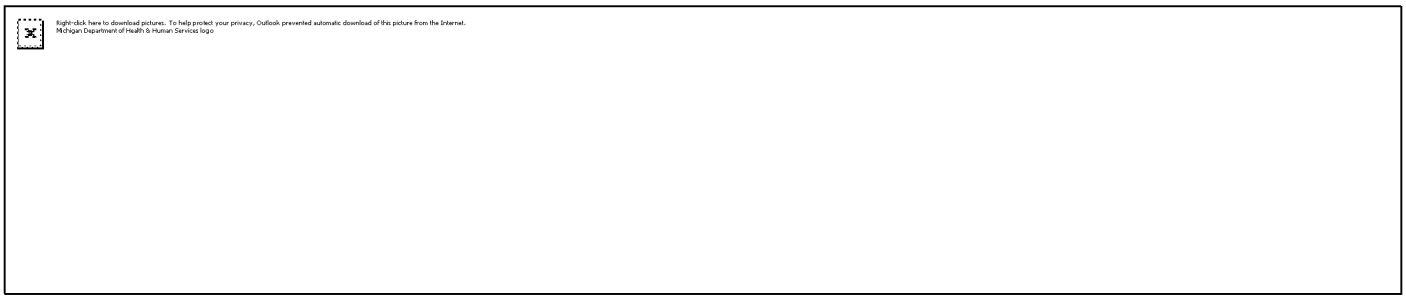
Subject: FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Water filters available for MDHHS clients, all Flint residents beginning Tuesday



Press Release

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: October 5, 2015

CONTACT: Jennifer Eisner, (517) 241-2112

Water filters available for MDHHS clients, all Flint residents beginning Tuesday

LANSING, Mich. – Free water filters will be available to current Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients and Flint residents at four locations beginning Tuesday, October 6, at 9 a.m. through a partnership between the MDHHS and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. Free National Sanitation Foundation certified water filters are being provided to Flint residents as part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area.

Current MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location to obtain a free, certified home water filter. Residents who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department offices located at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw in Flint. Staff will be onsite at all four locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

"Ensuring that families in the Flint area have access to resources that will help reduce the potential for lead exposure is our top priority," said Nick Lyon, director of the MDHHS. "I want to thank our partners who have mobilized to make water filters available – a point that highlights the importance of continued collaboration at the local, state and federal level as we move forward."

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active Family Independence Program (FIP), Food Assistance Program (FAP), Child Development and Care (CDC), State Disability Assistance (SDA), or Social Security Insurance (SSI) recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office to receive their filter free of charge. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their water bill to the GCCARD location.

Although blood lead levels throughout the city of Flint have remained steady, last week, MDHHS data was found to be consistent with a recent Hurley Children's Hospital study indicating increased blood lead levels in children residing in two Flint ZIP codes after a 2014 change in water source. While lead paint remains the number one cause of lead poisoning in Michigan, the recent data prompted MDHHS to take action to reduce potential lead exposures through water sources.

MDHHS is urging parents in Flint and throughout the state to do their part in preventing elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information about steps you can take now, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and available resources, visit www.michigang.gov/flintwater.

State offering extended, weekend hours for water filter distribution at Lippincott GCCARD

Nearly 5,000 NSF certified filters issued by MDHHS to Flint residents since Monday

LANSING, Mich. – Flint residents and Michigan Department of Health and Human Services clients with a city of Flint water bill will now be able to take advantage of extended hours this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department 2727 Lippincott location. Extended hours will be offered at the Lippincott facility only, and will run until 7 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, and from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday. The other three locations will maintain 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. operating hours, Monday through Friday, for filter pick up.

Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive, reemphasized that the Brita SAFF-100 filters being distributed by the department and GCCARD do meet the NSF/ANSI 53 standards for drinking water treatment units.

“The Brita faucet filtration system that we are distributing to residents are National Sanitation Foundation certified to reduce lead in drinking water,” said Dr. Eden Wells. “When connected appropriately, these filters improve water quality by filtering out contaminates including lead, chlorine, benzene and other chemicals.”

Since Monday when MDHHS announced that free water filters would be distributed at four Flint locations, the state and GCCARD have partnered to issue approximately 5,000 free NSF certified water filters to residents that are on the city of Flint water system. The distribution of filters is part of the administration's comprehensive approach to addressing water concerns in the area. These NSF certified water filters remove lead in the water administered through water taps in homes.

MDHHS clients and residents with a city of Flint water bill may take advantage of the extended hours at the Lippincott GCCARD. During the regular business hours, MDHHS clients are encouraged to visit either the 125 E. Union St. or 4809 Clio Road MDHHS office location; residents on Flint water who are not currently enrolled in MDHHS assistance programs should visit the GCCARD offices at 2727 Lippincott and 601 North Saginaw. Staff will be onsite at all four locations to distribute filters and assist residents who have questions about proper installation.

MDHHS clients in the city of Flint who are active recipients should bring valid identification and a copy of their water bill to their local MDHHS office. Flint residents who are not active MDHHS clients should bring identification and their city of Flint water bill to a GCCARD location.

MDHHS is urging all residents do their part to prevent elevated blood lead levels in children. For more information on prevention, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and resources, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Beginning Tuesday, October 13 at 9 a.m., city of Flint licensed and registered child care facilities can pick up a free NSF-certified filter water pitcher from the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department (GCCARD) located at 2727 Lippincott in Flint. Thanks to a donation from the United Way, child care providers may obtain one free 23-cup water pitcher for every 100 children.

Additionally, the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services is providing a NSF-certified faucet filter to every licensed and registered child care provider in the city of Flint. This is in addition to the filter a child care provider may have received as a homeowner in the city of Flint.

Staff picking up the filters must bring a copy of the child care license, personal identification, and proof of employment.

The Lippincott GCCARD will distribute filters and pitchers daily this week from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Extended hours are Thursday and Friday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., as well as this Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

MDHHS and LARA are urging all residents do their part to prevent elevated blood lead levels in children. For more prevention information, visit www.michigan.gov/lead, or contact your local health department. For updates on Flint water and resources, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest data outlining blood lead levels in Flint

Follow-up care, case management resources continue for families

LANSING, Mich. – Preliminary data indicates that 30 of 1,361 adults and children tested in Flint since October 1 had elevated blood lead levels, according to a report issued today by the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services.

This marks the first summary report on lead testing called for in the state's action plan related to health concerns about Flint's water infrastructure.

"Our goal is to help families reduce their exposure to lead sources," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We have made progress in testing and identifying those with elevated blood lead levels, and the department will continue to work closely with the Genesee County Health Department to reach these families. We will remain diligent in our ongoing outreach and education efforts."

Information comes from tests administered citywide to 1,361 children and adults since October 1. Tests showed that 21 of 969 children age 17 or younger and 9 of 392 adults over the age 18 were identified with elevated blood lead levels.

The report covers test results reported to MDHHS since the state action plan was put in place Oct.

2. It includes the number of tests and number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter, and captures both capillary and venous blood tests that have been reported to MDHHS since the beginning of October. People who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Five micrograms per deciliter is the level that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention considers elevated and triggers health care professional follow up with families.

The full report is posted online at www.michigan.gov/flintwater and will be updated as more data becomes available.

When reviewing historical trend data, the risk of lead exposure is highest during the third quarter of each year – July through September. Seasonal variation is the result of a number of factors including increased exposure to lead in dust and soil in the summer months.

In the third quarter of 2010, 8.3 percent of Flint children 6 and under showed elevated blood lead levels. The figure gradually decreased to 4.1 percent in the third quarter of 2013. During the same months in 2014, the figure increased to 7.5 percent and decreased to 6.4 percent in the third quarter of 2015.

Last month, MDHHS collaborated with the county health department and local partners to distribute educational resources and informational letters to Flint parents regarding lead testing. The state is providing funding for GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level has been detected. During these follow-up visits, nurses coordinate with environmental health investigators to meet with families in their homes to identify lead exposures, address questions and provide water filters. People can be exposed to lead from paint, soil, plumbing and other sources.

MDHHS continues to provide free water filters and replacement cartridges to Flint residents at four locations, including the MDHHS Flint offices and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest round of Flint blood lead level data

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its newest summary report on lead testing in Flint. According to preliminary data, 39 of 1,836 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"As testing continues, our focus remains on helping families reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We are working closely with the Genesee County Health Department to provide information and offer tools in the community, and encourage families to explore the resources that are available to them."

Both capillary and venous blood tests are included in the report, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS is working closely with local partners to offer resources and distribute important lead testing and prevention information. Additional state funding has allowed for Genesee County Health Department (GCHD) nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected. These families can also choose to have the nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources.

To support these efforts, the state is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities on enhanced screening and testing. In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS has recommended blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are still available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Updated summary report on Flint blood lead level data now available

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its bi-weekly summary report on lead testing in Flint. Preliminary data indicate that 43 of 2,182 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"In partnership with the Genesee County Health Department, we are working to engage and provide resources to residents to reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "Case management and home lead analysis are available for families in which an elevated blood lead level has been detected."

The first MDHHS summary report on blood lead levels in Flint was issued Dec. 3, 2015. Updated reports are posted on a bi-weekly basis on the www.michigan.gov/flintwater website. After refining our methods to identify age, some people are now counted in a different age group than on previous reports. The total counts for each year have not changed.

The report includes both capillary and venous blood tests, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS, together with the Genesee County Health Department (GCHD), is working with local partners to distribute educational information around lead testing and prevention. Supplemental state dollars are funding GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected.

Families with an elevated blood lead level can also choose to have a nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to help identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources. Families with questions about their blood lead levels or test results are also encouraged to contact their primary care physician or local health department.

In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities to recommend blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

City of Flint Warns of Potential Health Risks Caused by the City's Drinking Water

The city says there's been too much disinfection byproduct in Flint's water system recently, something that -- over many years could cause liver, kidney or central nervous system problems and an increased risk of cancer.

The notice from the city says Flint water is safe to drink but warns that those with a severely compromised immune system, who have an infant or who are elderly may be at increased risk and should seek advice about drinking water from their health care provider.

For others, there is no need to boil water or take other actions, the notice says.

It is recommended that licensed child care providers and licensed adult foster care and homes for the aged providers seek medical advice or use bottle water when serving individuals at increased risk as outlined above.

Hi Caroline,

Attached is a list of all schools in Flint with both mailing and physical addresses. This information can be accessed in the EEM by following the instructions below:

1. Go to https://cepi.state.mi.us/eem/
2. On the left-hand side of the screen, click "Search"
3. Click "Detailed"
4. Set the Status field to "Open-Active"
5. Set the Characteristic field to "Physical Address City" (Under the addresses section)
6. Set the Operator field to "Equals"
7. In the Value field, enter the word "Flint"
8. Click "Add Criterion"
9. Click "Search"
10. Near the bottom of the page, click "Download Entity Data"
11. You will see a list of characteristics sorted by Entity Type
12. Put a check in the "Entity Code" and "Official Name of Entity" for each type of entity you are interested in
13. Check the "Include Address Types" box
14. Click "Start Download"
15. The file will be generated in xml format
16. Save the file somewhere on your computer
17. Go to Excel, and open a new spreadsheet
18. Within Excel, click File then Open
19. Locate the saved xml file and open
20. The file will open in Excel with all requested data

Welcome to the First Edition of Stewardship

Welcome to the first edition of Stewardship - The State Universities of Michigan and the Public Good, brought to you by the Michigan Association of State Universities. Published monthly, Stewardship will serve as a media showcase for the tremendous outreach the state universities display in serving their students and communities as well as the State of Michigan and beyond. Covering issues as diverse as K-12 education, economic development, health care, environmental sustainability, and public safety, these media accounts will affirm that Michigan's state universities are public universities serving the public interest.

Gov. Rick Snyder speaks on Monday, Dec. 16 at the Flint Assembly Plant upon the announcement that General Motors is investing nearly $1.3 billion into five manufacturing sites in three states including Michigan. Jake May | MLive.com

FLINT, MI – Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder sat down with The Flint Journal Editorial Board and reporters while he was in town for a major General Motors announcement Monday, Dec. 16.

General Motors says it will invest $600 million in upgrades at Flint Assembly, including a new paint shop.

"It's very exciting. It was great to see. GM's announcing almost $1.3 billion in investment. The good part is over $1.2 (billion) of it is in Michigan," Snyder said.

The Flint Journal staff then had an opportunity to have a question-and-answer session with Snyder on local issues.

Here is what he had to say:

Question: The emergency manager is expected to transition out in 2014. Do you expect that a city administrator or manager would be put in power during or after the transition?

Governor: "I wouldn't necessarily draw that conclusion. I mean, what we're looking at is each community is somewhat different, so it's really looking at the community situation in terms of the mayor and the city council and how well prepared (they are) and what staff's already in the city government. And so, again, there isn't one model to do this, so I think we're going to be open to having a good discussion about what might be best. One thing we do want to be sensitive to is making sure there's procedures to best practices to really avoid people slipping back ... into some of the challenges that were there previously."

Question: Will the state troopers assigned in Flint continue after the emergency manager is gone?

Governor: "I would expect them to continue. They are not directly related to the EM situation at all. The issue about having the Michigan State Police having an enhanced role ... is because of the crime numbers. Again, when I started this process I looked at the four communities – we had four communities on the top 10 in the country of violent crime. So that's what grew the commitment. ...

So the good part is the results have improved quite a bit in Flint. I got 10-month numbers from January through October and the violent crime numbers were down 30 percent, the property crime numbers I believe were down 16 percent and when you look at it in the context of fewer crimes taking place, arrests were actually up and clearance on arrests were actually up, so the system is working better in Flint.

I don't really equate that with the EM thing. There's a problem. We're going to work on the problem.

When I made the statement, when I did the public safety message originally, I made the comment that this would be a multi-year effort because I wanted it to be a sustainable effort, so that also depends on how strong the local police force is, how strong the criminal justice system is and the community."

Question: On Friday, Emergency Manager Darnell Earley restricted the powers of Flint Councilman Eric Mays following his arrest for drunken driving and marijuana possession. Are there any discussions about removing Eric Mays from the Flint City Council?

Governor: "He as emergency manager has a certain set of powers and how he operates with city council and that's within his purview. With the respect to the whole formal removal of office, there's a fairly well established process that goes with the attorney general making a review and then report to me.

What I would say is it's premature, we'd be very early in that process at best."

Read the full story here.

Question: Flint is in the middle of a demolition blitz using those federal funds that were awarded. What solutions are being explored to help cities like Saginaw, Flint and Detroit utilize the space being created by blight elimination projects like this?

Governor: That's where the land banks can really play a development role. That's part of the point of having land banks is, to take those properties and ... look at whatever the community plan is. From a state perspective, I don't really view it as the state's purview to tell a community now you've cleared the properties, here's the land. What do you want to do with it? I really look to the community to say, what's your master plan for how you want to redevelop your communities?

Read full story here.

Question: What can we expect from the state budget?

Gov: Snyder will have an announcement in early February about the state's budget to explain more in detail.

"I wouldn't expect to see any major reductions," he said.

Question: 50 Michigan school districts ended 2012-2013 fiscal year in deficit. Flint has a $10 million deficit. What are the plans moving forward with addressing those deficits? Will there be a state takeover in Flint schools"?

Governor: "(A state takeover is) a very objective process. ... There are districts that come on and off that list. The goal here is as the economy continues improving we'll see that reduced.

One of the things we want to do is work with the school districts more on tools that help them do good financial management before they get into the environment of potentially even needing an emergency manager. I think one thing you can see is that we might try and get enhanced resources either in education or treasury or both to say how can they work with a better early warning system better management system to give feedback to district to solve these issues now."

GM's decision to stop using Flint River water will cost Flint $400,000 per year

FLINT, MI -- General Motors' decision to stop using Flint River water at its engine plant will cost the city an estimated $400,000 annually.

Department of Public Works Director Howard Croft told a City Council committee Monday, Oct. 13, that the city has agreed to allow GM to tap into a Flint Township water line because river water supplied by the city caused engine parts to rust.

"There was an agreement made already. This was a request from GM to the city," said Croft, who estimated the loss of revenue at $400,000 per year.

Although the city's permission to leave the Flint water system was required, some members of the City Council said they were left in the dark about the GM situation by emergency manager Darnell Earley and Mayor Dayne Walling.

Earley's office had not released details of the GM agreement or announced it as of Tuesday, and Walling told council members he had known about the deal for "just a couple of days."

"If we are (being asked) to act in good faith, let's have some good faith from the emergency manager," said 1st Ward Councilman Eric Mays.

Under the Flint-GM agreement, the plant will return as a Flint water customer after the city switches back to using Lake Huron water from the Karegnondi Water Authority once its pipeline is completed -- something that's expected to happen by the close of 2016.

Seventh Ward Councilwoman Monica Galloway said the decision by GM to stop using river water will cause more questions about its quality and safety from skeptical residents.

The city has struggled to maintain residual chlorine levels throughout the water system since it began using the Flint River rather than pre-treated Lake Huron water from the city of Detroit.

There were also three boil water advisories in a 22-day span this summer after positive tests for total coliform and fecal coliform bacteria.

"I hope this doesn't set a precedent for people to jump off (the Flint system) because of the quality of the water," Galloway said.

"(But) this is just another thing that says to me (that) we are like guinea pigs," she said. "It's like a research project ... that we would normally do on rats."

A district engineer for the state Department of Environmental Quality said Monday that Flint's system is producing safe water and that chloride levels are considered acceptable -- not excellent, which GM requires.

The city's use of ferric chloride, which works as a coagulant to help remove suspended and dissolved solids and contaminants, has likely caused elevated chloride levels, DEQ has said.

GM spokesman Tom Wickham said Tuesday, Oct. 14, that engine crankshafts showed rust after they were machined with river water this summer.

Wickham said the rusted parts never left Flint Engine Operations and said the automaker has been subjecting Flint River water to additional treatment to reduce chloride levels as well as hauling in water from Detroit for use in the plant since that time.

GM and Flint Township officials said Monday that the company last week reached a temporary agreement to buy Lake Huron water from Flint Township for the West Bristol Road engine plant.

Wickham said GM has said GM had been coping with the water issue at Flint Engine by further treating the water it receives from Flint and supplementing it with non-river water.

He said employees at the engine plant discovered rust on the crankshafts initially, causing GM to investigate the possible cause further.

MIRS BREAKING NEWS: Flint To Return To Detroit Water, Gov Asks Lawmakers To Help Cover Costs -- 11:18 a.m.

http://www.mirsnews.com/alert.php?alert_id=2106

(FLINT) -- The city of Flint will transition back to getting its water from Detroit within weeks, and Gov. Rick SNYDER said today he is in "full support" of the move.

In addition to that, Snyder said he would be asking the Legislature for $6 million to assist with the move, which will make up half of the estimated $12 million it will cost Flint to go back to its old water supply, as estimated through next summer.

The other $6 million will be divided up between Flint itself ($2 million) and from a donation from the Mott Foundation ($4 million).

The cost estimate is based on the time it will take to complete the connection to Flint's new permanent water supply, the Karegnondi Water Authority. That's expected to go live in June 2016.

Snyder said the decision to support the move back to Detroit water -- something he said the city is ultimately in charge of deciding -- was based in part by a recommendation made by a meeting of technical experts Wednesday.

Joining Snyder at the press conference today were some of his cabinet officials and Flint leaders, as well as Senate Minority Leader Jim ANANICH (D-Flint), who described today's actions as a step in the right direction, but going forward, he said there must be more transparency and that the state's action plan be implemented fully.

Split over guns and prison reform, voters unite over water quality

LANSING, Mich. -- In the wake of the Flint water crisis, how concerned are voters about the safety of the water in their home? Enough to agree with each other, according to the latest Michigan's Pulse poll, a partnership of Public Sector Consultants and Michigan Radio.

From November 3 to November 5, 2015, Denno Research surveyed 600 likely voters on a range of topics, including water quality, concealed pistols, prison reform and autonomous vehicles. Beyond increased attention to urban water quality, these highly politicized topics yielded little agreement, with stark differences by political affiliation, race and age.

Water Safety

Ninety-one percent of respondents agree that the State of Michigan should examine the water systems in densely populated areas for signs of failing infrastructure. The vast majority (84 percent) also feel that water should be tested in Michigan's K-12 school buildings at least once a year.

About half of respondents (46 percent) are concerned about the safety of their water, but there are clear differences by subgroups:

- African-American voters (71 percent) are more concerned than white voters (40 percent).
- Democrats (52 percent) are more concerned than Republicans (36 percent).
- Wayne County respondents (61 percent) have higher concerns than those in other parts of the state, with 81 percent of voters in Detroit expressing concern about the safety of their water.

Concealed Pistols and Prison Reform

With the recent coverage of high-profile shootings on college and K-12 school campuses, allowing concealed pistols in these places has become a major topic for the upcoming presidential election. Under state law, those licensed to carry concealed pistols still cannot carry their weapons at schools; at day care centers, sports arenas or stadiums; at entertainment facilities that seat 2,500 or more; at bars, churches, hospitals, casinos and dormitories or classrooms of colleges or universities.

About half of voters (46 percent) support lifting the ban in some or all of these places, while (49 percent) oppose that.

- Of the Republicans polled, 65 percent support lifting the ban in some or all of these places, compared to Democrats, at 33 percent.

Less than half of respondents (40 percent) support lifting the ban in day care centers, K-12 schools and college dormitories and classrooms, with a little over half (55 percent) opposed.

- Almost half of all men polled (47 percent) and almost two-thirds of Republicans polled (62 percent) support lifting the ban; while women (34 percent), Democrats (27 percent) and Independents (34 percent) oppose doing so.

Slightly more than half of Michigan voters (53 percent) support presumptive parole, legislation recently passed by the Michigan House that automatically paroles low-risk felons after they serve their minimum sentence.

- African-Americans (74 percent) and Democrats (67 percent) are more supportive than whites (49 percent) and Republicans (40 percent).

Finally, we asked voters if they think offenders who were convicted of violent crimes under the age of 18 should be eligible for parole. The jury is clearly still out on this issue, with opinion split between yes (41 percent) and no (39 percent), with nearly a quarter (20 percent) saying they don't know or are unsure.

Robot Cars

Autonomous vehicles are currently being developed in Michigan, and some (like the Google Self-Driving Car) are already being road tested in other states. We wondered if people were comfortable with the idea of robots driving cars on Michigan's roads, and more to the point, if people thought they would make our roads safer.

- A solid majority (68 percent) are not comfortable with the idea of having driverless cars on Michigan's roads, with half (51 percent) saying they were very uncomfortable.
- A little more than half of voters (56 percent) feel that driverless cars would be more dangerous than the humans currently driving on Michigan's roads.

Despite this opposition, voters accept that this will be how people get around in the near future. Most respondents (57 percent) think that driverless cars will be common in Michigan sometime in the next five to 20 years. That buys humanity at least a few years to figure out how to prevent the cyborg invasion that is sure to follow.

Legislative Reform

In a previous PSC poll after the failure of Proposal 1, road funding was identified as a critical priority, with voters saying the legislature should work over the summer to resolve the issue. While the poll did not specifically address the merits of the $1.2 billion package recently signed by Gov.

Rick Snyder, voters clearly do not approve of the way this issue was handled, with the vast majority rating the legislature as bad (21 percent) or terrible (58 percent).

We followed this question with a couple of options on how to improve the effectiveness of the Michigan Legislature. All of the ideas appear to have similar appeal, which seems to indicate that voters are ready for a change -- even if they don't know exactly what the change should look like:

- Stricter campaign finance and/or ethics laws (25 percent)
- Switch to a part-time legislature (21 percent)
- Do nothing because legislators can always be voted out of office if they are doing a poor job (21 percent)
- Change the length of term limits by allowing members to serve up to 12 years in either chamber (18 percent)
- Don't know/unsure (15 percent)

Goodbye Halloween

On the heels of the Halloween season, we wondered what had scared voters the most so far in 2015. While a quarter (25 percent) were not willing to express their fears out loud, those that did were scared most by the presidential debates (42 percent), followed by the Detroit Lions (22 percent).

About the Survey

Michigan Radio, an NPR News Station and the state's most listened-to public radio service, and Public Sector Consultants (PSC), the state's premier nonpartisan think tank, are partnering on a yearlong initiative studying Michiganders' attitudes toward policy issues affecting their lives in a series called Michigan's Pulse. Michigan's Pulse will release quarterly in weeklong segments on Michigan Radio's Stateside with Cynthia Canty with in-depth analysis by PSC researchers and other thought leaders.

The Michigan Radio/PSC survey of the Michigan electorate was conducted by Lansing-based Denno Research. Six-hundred respondents, 450 by landline and 150 by cell phone, in the state of Michigan were surveyed from November 3 to 5, 2015, with a margin of error of plus/minus 4 percent. A screen was employed to include only those participants who said they would vote, either at the polls or by absentee ballot, in the November 2016 general election.

Full survey results are available here.

Public Sector Consultants is Michigan's most respected, connected, and dedicated research and program management firm, with specialties in governance and regulation, health care, education, energy, and environmental policy. PSC is committed to providing objective research and sound solutions to the public and private sector.

Michigan Radio is an NPR News Station, and the state's most listened-to public radio service, attracting more than 500,000 listeners each week across Michigan. Licensed to the University of Michigan, Michigan Radio broadcasts at 91.7 FM in southeastern Michigan, 91.1 FM in Flint, and 104.1 in western Michigan, and is available online at michiganradio.org.

Volume #54, Report #204 -- Wednesday, October 14, 2015

Tentative Deals Reached On State Employees Contracts

The state has reached tentative agreements with its bargaining units on new contracts for state employees.

Two unions - the Michigan Corrections Organization and the Michigan State Employees Association - confirmed Wednesday the major aspects of the tentative deals between the state and their unions: a one-year contract for wages and health care starting October 1, 2016, that provides a 1 percent base wage increase, and 1.5 percent lump sum payment for employees in October 2016.

Sources told Gongwer News Service the same provisions apply to tentative agreements between the state and other unions representing state employees.

The Service Employees International Union 517M also announced a tentative agreement but did not publicly offer details.

Officials with the United Auto Workers Local 6000, the state's largest employee union, did not return calls for comment.

"While this agreement isn't perfect, it maintains key pieces of our contract that members said were very important to them, such as their health care costs," MCO President Tom Tylutki said in a statement. "Our negotiations centered on the issues members told us were important. Health care is their number one concern."

The agreements are merely tentative and still require ratification from union members as well as approval from the Civil Service Commission.

But presuming union members ratify them, it will set one key piece of the upcoming 2016-17 fiscal year budget.

Other portions of the contracts would last the traditional three years. However, the Office of State Employer pushed for a one-year deal on the wages and health care components out of concern about what will happen with the federal excise tax on premium health care plans, MCO said in a bulletin to its members.

That is the so-called Cadillac tax in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. Under that law, starting with the 2018 tax year, if the aggregate cost of the health care coverage an employer provides exceeds a statutory dollar limit, then the excess is subject to a 40 percent excise tax.

The idea behind the tax was to reduce health care spending. But it is providing a rare point of agreement between Democratic supporters of the law and Republicans who have long called for the Affordable Care Act's repeal. Unions and Democrats have said the tax should be repealed, as have Republicans and business groups, but it is unclear what will happen.

A spokesperson for the Office of the State Employer declined to comment.

Meekhof Slams Schuette On Presumptive Parole; Snyder Also Jumps In

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=77201&locid=1" } faced heat from Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } Wednesday regarding legislation pending in the Senate on presumptive parole, and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } also defended the legislation.

In the past week, Mr. Schuette has launched a campaign-style assault on the legislation, referring to it as "early" release, "catch and release" and "autopilot parole." Supporters of the bill have said he is just totally wrong in his characterization of the bills.

"He's been out there on a limb on this, throwing out a direct line and saying stuff like it's anti-cop, which was over the top, and he and I had that discussion yesterday," Mr. Meekhof (R-West Olive) said of Mr. Schuette. "He's certainly within his right to comment on public policy. (But) he doesn't make public policy, he just follows what we do."

Still, Mr. Schuette's fusillade against the legislation may be having an impact. Mr. Meekhof said his caucus is voicing considerable concern about it.

Mr. Schuette has been relentless on the issue. Last week, on WKAR's "Off the Record," he said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB413801" } was "elitist" because those who live in nicer areas would have fewer worries about criminals being released back into society (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542010105" }). And his Twitter account gives updates seemingly every hour or two about "autopilot parole" and examples of parolees re-offending once released.

"Public safety is the first responsibility of government. Autopilot release of violent offenders is bad for our neighborhoods, cities and small towns," he said Tuesday in a joint statement with Genesee County Prosecutor David Leyton, his Democratic opponent in 2010 for attorney general. "We cannot build a better, stronger, safer Michigan if our public safety is threatened."

Mr. Schuette and Mr. Meekhof are also potential rivals for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in 2018 when Mr. Snyder cannot seek re-election.

Asked if he told Mr. Schuette to keep his nose out of the matter, Mr. Meekhof responded, "I said it was probably not a wise idea to talk the way he talked about the caucus on the other side. He said he'd take that under advisement."

Mr. Meekhof said he was unsure whether Mr. Schuette had apologized to the House members who drafted and supported HB 4138, which passed the House earlier this month 67-39 and currently sits in the Senate Government Operations Committee chaired by Mr. Meekhof.

"But he probably ought to think about how he treats everybody in general, and if he really wants to get public policy done, the best effort would be to work with people," Mr. Meekhof said.

Schuette spokesperson Andrea Bitely declined to comment on Mr. Meekhof's comments.

In addition to comments by Mr. Meekhof, { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } expressed support of the measure in prepared remarks. This came a day after House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant) also felt compelled to defend the legislation against Mr. Schuette's criticism.

"Michigan needs a smarter criminal justice system that doesn't simply punish people who commit crimes, but frees up resources that can instead be used on effective efforts to reduce criminal activity and make our communities safer," Mr. Snyder said. "House Bill 4138 creates consistency in parole decisions for low-risk offenders by ensuring that they are all subject to the same standards when being considered for parole."

Mr. Snyder also noted the long-term impact of the change could be housing about 3,600 fewer low-risk felons in state prisons a decade from now, freeing up some $80 million "that can be reinvested in preventing crime rather than continuing to keep low-risk offenders behind bars after they have served their minimum sentence."

HB 4138 currently awaits action in the Senate Government Operations Committee, chaired by Mr. Meekhof, who said he had a "healthy discussion" with his caucus on the matter on Wednesday.

"We're looking at this presumptive parole along with some other corrections reform. Senator Proos has some great ideas that we're probably going to combine with it and come up with a better package," he said.

But Mr. Meekhof also admitted that there was "a lot of concern" among his caucus members, especially since the issue has always started in the House, even last term.

"They needed a lot of information to even understand the terms that were being talked about because we really haven't studied this at all in our caucus," he said.

Given the expectation that { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=102801&locid=1" } (R-St. Joseph) would lead on another package of corrections reform, Mr. Meekhof said it would be "a little while" before there would be any action on the issue in the Senate, though specifics beyond that were not discussed.

On Roads, Meekhof, Greimel Trade Barbs As Meeting Canceled

Wednesday was meant to be a cooling off day following Tuesday's impasse on talks to generate $1.2 billion in new funds for roads, but instead the disputes continued.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive) said he was surprised at remarks by House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=268401&locid=1" } (D-Auburn Hills) on road funding talks and how a proposal that the Legislative Quadrant may have on the table is insufficient.

The problem continues to be whether and how to provide income tax relief as a sweetener to an expected gasoline tax increase (See { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=news.cfm&article_id=542030101" }).

"He sat in the same room, saw the same spreadsheets I did and understood that the way we're doing it by the redirection of revenue going a little bit at a time and tax rollback only when there is over-the-top revenue," Mr. Meekhof said midday Wednesday. "He saw that it worked, so I'm not quite sure where he's coming up with his assertion that it's cutting anything."

The quadrant meeting scheduled for noon was canceled. Snyder press secretary Sara Wurfel said it was too soon on the heels of Tuesday's meeting, after which Mr. Snyder declared the talks at an impasse. But Ms. Wurfel said Mr. Snyder would continue talking to leaders on the issue.

Mr. Meekhof said the rollback has been on the table the whole time, "and now at the 11th hour (Mr. Greimel) wants it removed," Mr. Meekhof said. "I'm not going to remove it."

The income tax rollback passed by the Senate helped to garner some Republican votes for the meat of the legislation that seeks, in part, a gas tax hike. The Senate plan is complicated, only allowing a reduction in the tax if revenues grow and putting no bottom on how far the income tax rate could fall.

"The only dispute is, is it the rate of inflation or a little bit more than the rate of inflation?" Mr. Meekhof said of the rollback likely to be included in a final deal on road funding. "But it's the same mechanics."

Asked if he felt as though Mr. Greimel's concerns were "coming out of nowhere," Mr. Meekhof said the first he had heard of such a concern came Tuesday. But he said the Senate stands ready and willing to work on a plan.

"We sent over a plan with an income tax rollback, specifically protecting the things we think are important, and dedicating money towards roads. I think that was a good plan," he said.

Mr. Meekhof said Mr. Greimel ought to "find a way to compromise with Speaker Cotter and get it done."

But Mr. Meekhof wouldn't go so far as to say that if a roads solution doesn't get done soon that it would be solely Mr. Greimel's fault. Pointing fingers, he said, doesn't solve the problem.

"We're trying to solve the problem, and throwing mud around isn't going to make it better or give us a better opportunity to do it," he said.

Greimel spokesperson Katie Carey said Mr. Greimel was disappointed when the governor canceled the quadrant meeting originally scheduled for Wednesday.

On Mr. Meekhof's comments, Ms. Carey said: "We respectfully disagree with the Senate majority leader. We were always concerned with the hit to the General Fund."

Ms. Carey noted public schools, safety and other Democratic priorities are funded through the General Fund.

She also said an income tax cut is going to help the wealthier residents of the state.

"It is not going to help low-income Michiganders," she said.

She also said the Democrats are trying to find a roads solution that focuses mostly on roads.

"We want something that is more concrete that will be a long-term financially sustainable solution to fix the roads," she said.

Cotter spokesperson Gideon D'Assandro said Mr. Cotter and Mr. Snyder met Wednesday and discussed goals on the issue moving forward. Mr. Cotter remains hopeful talks will resume, Mr. D'Assandro said.

House Approves Nearly $10M For Flint Water

The House unanimously voted Wednesday evening to approve $9.35 million to return Flint to the Detroit water system and pay for additional state staff in the city's schools to gauge exposure to lead, handle evaluation and protocols on drinking water and to assist with plumbing engineers.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB410201" } passed the House 105-0.

Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) said in a statement he attended House session Wednesday and told them the importance of passing the legislation.

"The people of Flint have the same right to clean, safe drinking water as residents in every district," he said. "I appreciate my colleagues on both sides of the aisle recognizing this and moving swiftly to secure resources. This is an important step necessary to fix the current crisis, and once this is complete, it's important that our next priority is getting to the bottom of how this happened. We need to make sure this never happens again."

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } last week called for state funds to be used return to drawing water from the Detroit system and ending a disastrous move to pull water for the city from the Flint River and to pay for additional state staffers from the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Environmental Quality and the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs working in the city.

The supplemental appropriations allocates $6 million to get the city back on Detroit's water system; $300,000 for DEQ's drinking water and environmental health services; $1 million for DEQ's laboratory services; $1 million for DHHS emergency services to purchase and distribute water to Flint residents; $850,000 for follow up services for children, including testing lead levels and care for those with abnormal levels; and $200,000 for plumbing inspections.

Of the $9.35 million allocated, $7.15 million is from the General Fund.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" }, chair of the House Appropriations Committee, said he was pleased to see a unanimous vote for the bill.

"There is a time in this Legislature that we have to have statesmanship and stateswomanship and this was one of those times. This is a public health emergency in Flint," he said.

Mr. Pscholka said some members speculated whether the funds should come from the Budget Stabilization Fund, but said that was not necessary.

"We are in a fiscal position in order to handle something like this," he said.

Insufficient corrosion controls for water drawn from the river, which is inherently more corrosive than water drawn from Lake Huron, where the Detroit system draws its water, caused lead from the city's old service lines to leach into the water, leading to lead levels in the water exceeding the federal standard to trigger remediation and to elevated lead levels in the blood of some Flint children.

The $6 million will go toward a contract between the city and the Detroit system to pay for water service until next summer when a new regional pipeline to Lake Huron is expected to be completed. The Mott Foundation is putting up $4 million and the city of Flint the remaining $2 million.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS: The House unanimously passed { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB484301" } Wednesday, which would protect minors seeking medical treatment, or helping a minor seek medical treatment, for an overdose or other drug-related illness or injury from possession charges.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville) introduced the bill in response to the loss of Mason Mizwicki, a Watervliet teenager whose mother, Lori Mizwicki, has been an advocate for greater awareness of the prescription drug problem.

"Even taking up the legislation has helped to start much-needed conversations about the problem," he said in a statement. "It's not isolated to one town or one portion of the state. This can happen to any teen, anywhere. We have to keep a spotlight on the issue."

The bill now goes to the Senate for consideration.

Third Grade Reading Bill Delayed In House With Votes Short

The House spent nearly 7 hours Wednesday attempting to gather enough votes to pass a bill designed to get third grade students reading proficiently, but eventually called it quits with a positive outlook on the bill's chances Thursday.

"Very definitely," said { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=285601&locid=1" } (R-Park Township), sponsor of { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB482201" } when asked if she thought the bill would pass Thursday.

"We're working really hard and a lot of our members had questions today, so we are in the process of answering a lot of those tomorrow," she told reporters after the long session.

Indeed, Gideon D'Assandro, spokesperson for House { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=288901&locid=1" } (R-Mount Pleasant), had earlier told reporters the questions coming from members were overwhelming and needed more time to be properly answered.

Both Democratic and Republican House members were in and out of the chamber on Wednesday, clearly attempting to come to some kind of agreement on the bill.

At about 7:30 p.m. the Democrats went into caucus, when they returned to session the House voted on the Flint water fix and then adjourned shortly after.

Ms. Price said it is hard to say what kind of changes might be made to the bill before final passage.

She said members didn't understand how much interaction there would be with the child once they have been identified as having a reading deficiency.

Ms. Price also said some members were concerned because students who were making progress in reading should be promoted from third grade.

"But if you are in third grade and you're still reading at first grade level and you've made progress since the beginning of first grade, is that enough progress?" She said. "You still need to, when you get into fourth grade, be able to read to learn. And if you're not there yet, it's going to be more difficult."

Katie Carey, spokesperson for House Democrats, agreed that there are a lot of questions and concerns from members. She said she is hopeful the chamber can come up with the votes to pass the bill Thursday.

Ms. Carey said Democratic members are looking for some changes in the retention piece of the bill and parental involvement.

"In the end we all have the same goal for this legislation. It's just a matter of how do you get there and what those look like," she said.

The bill, as reported form committee, would retain some third-graders who are reading more than a grade level behind, but it also provides for many intervention services before the third grade assessment and outlines "good cause" exemptions.

Similar legislation was controversial last term and was never able to be voted on by the full House.

Kosowski Proposes Sports Gambling For Road Funding

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=312601&locid=1" } on Wednesday told the House Regulatory Reform Committee one way to get more funding for the state's roads and bridges is to legalize sports gambling and simulcasting horse races at casinos in the state.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB446901" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB447001" } would allow casinos to accept wagers on sporting events, remove the current prohibition on televising simulcast horse races at casinos and allow for wagers on the races as well.

Mr. Kosowski (D-Westland) said he would be open to expanding the bill to horse racing tracks in the state.

To actually become law, the bills have several obstacles to overcome. First, a two-thirds majority is needed from both chambers and would need voter approval during the general election. Additionally, a federal court found that New Jersey's efforts to legalize sports betting violated federal law.

But Mr. Kosowski said the court is going to re-hear the case and there is a chance the original decision would be overturned.

"There are bookies everywhere. We all know this. Why not regulate it?" Mr. Kosowski said.

Originally, Mr. Kosowski intended to use the legislation to get more road funding. But he said as he has done more research, he would like some of the revenue generated to go to the race tracks in the state, and some funds to go to gambling addiction treatment and prevention.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=219701&locid=1" } (R-Onekama), chair of the committee, asked Mr. Kosowski what kind of support he had for the bill, noting that he didn't have any co-sponsors. Mr. Kosowski said he doesn't ask for co-sponsors and he believes the support is there.

Joe Asher, CEO of William Hill U.S., a bookmaking company, told the committee regulating the business is best.

Mr. Asher said suspicious activity can be reported and investigated in real time. And, he said, since it is the company's money being used there is incentive to call and report such activity.

"Oversight and protection do not occur in Michigan, however, because the illegal operators ...exist, and are not regulated," he said.

Mr. Asher said if casinos outsource the bookmaking there is little risk to them because companies such as his often front the cost.

He also said there may be losing days or weeks in the business, but there are very few losing months.

George Kutlenios, president of the Michigan Horseman's Benevolent and Protective Association, told the committee in June 2014 that Michigan thoroughbred horses returned to the Hazel Park raceway and saw 10,000 fans. He said attendance on regular days has consistently averaged 6,000 people.

Mr. Kutlenios said he appreciates the bill but would like to see a provision creating a relationship between any venue wishing to simulcast thoroughbred racing and a licensed state track to "ensure sustainability and quality of Michigan thoroughbred racing, and the resulting support to the state's agricultural industry can continue."

MMA AND BOXING REGULATIONS: The committee did report { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15201" }

and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15401" } regulating professional boxing, professional or amateur mixed martial arts or similar "unarmed combat."

The responsibilities of the Michigan Unarmed Combat Commission are outlined in SB 152, and that commission, alongside the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, would have jurisdiction over all boxing or MMA contests. The legislation also revises and establishes new regulations concerning the conduct of the events, as well as revises fee amounts for licenses to have such events.

Among the regulations are ensuring a contestant has been drug tested and having an on-site inspector. Women would also be required to submit a negative pregnancy test before competitions.

Michigan Chamber, Which Backed Peabody In 2014, Endorses Howell In 82nd

The Michigan Chamber announced on Wednesday its endorsement of Republicans Mary Whiteford in the 80th House District and Gary Howell in the 82nd House District, where former Reps. Cindy Gamrat and Todd Courser are running for re-election, respectively.

Mary Whiteford of Casco Township lost to Ms. Gamrat (R-Plainwell) in the 2014 Republican primary for the seat. Ms. Gamrat was expelled from the House last month but has said the voters deserve a voice in the process and is attempting to win her job back.

"Mary Whiteford will be a strong supporter of job creation and economic growth and we are pleased to endorse her in this special election," said Michigan Chamber President and CEO Rich Studley, in a statement. "The residents of Allegan County deserve better representation. We believe Whiteford possesses the experience and strength of character necessary to serve the 80th House District well."

Ms. Whiteford also has the endorsement of the Great Lakes Education Project and the Grand Rapids Chamber of Commerce political action committee.

Mr. Howell of North Branch is the Lapeer County Intermediate School District president and is taking on 11 other candidates in the 82nd District primary, including Mr. Courser (R-Lapeer), who resigned before he was able to be expelled from the House.

"Gary Howell understands the importance of pursuing policies based on individual freedom, incentive and opportunity to keep Michigan moving forward," said Jim Holcomb, senior vice president and general counsel for the Michigan Chamber, in a statement. "If elected, Howell will provide the residents of Lapeer County with the effective representation they deserve."

Endorsements in the 82nd District are split up more than in the 80th District. Former Rep. Kevin Daley has endorsed Chris Tuski of Lapeer, who is a farmer and volunteer firefighter. And GLEP has endorsed Jan Peabody of Lapeer, who lost in the 2014 primary to Mr. Courser.

In the 2014 Republican primary, the state Chamber endorsed Ms. Peabody. It did not endorse in the 80th.

The November 3 special election primary comes as Ms. Gamrat and Mr. Courser were participating in an extramarital affair together while serving in the House. An internal House Business Office investigation then found the two were misusing state resources to attempt personal and political gains.

Revenue From Increased Hunting, Licensing Fees Less Than Expected

Revenue generated from the increase in hunting and fishing license fees is about $5 million less than expected, Department of Natural Resources { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=302901&locid=1" } told the House Appropriations Committee on Wednesday.

Mr. Creagh said the department expected $18 million from the change in fees in the 2014-15 fiscal year, but only saw $13 million. And in the 2013-14 fiscal year, which included seven months of the new fee structure, the department expected $11.8 million in new revenue, but only received $7.8 million.

Austin Scott, the House Fiscal Agency analyst for the DNR, said he expects to receive more revenue numbers for the fiscal year that ended two weeks ago.

Mr. Creagh said the changes in fees also changed buying patterns, as the licenses are shorter term rather than annual. He also said the increase in the out-of-state licenses has affected those hunters coming into the state.

A non-resident hunter must purchase a $150 base license and then purchase additional licenses for the species they wish to hunt, which range from $8 to $25. Out-of-state fishing licenses also increased from $42 to $67.

But, Mr. Creagh told the committee, the state is not out of line in its fees compared to neighboring states, and the fees are a bargain compared to states out west.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=316901&locid=1" } (R-Bloomfield Hills) said many groups encouraged the increase in fees when the Legislature began considering them and noted it may simply take time for the increases to set in.

LANDFILL ODOR VIOLATIONS: The committee reported { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB478301" } , which would increase penalties under Michigan's waste management laws for first and second violations of the law from $10,000 and $25,000 each day, to $25,000 and $75,000, respectively.

The bill cleared the committee 25-0, with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=322301&locid=1" } (D-East Lansing) and { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=248901&locid=1" } (D-Sterling Heights) abstaining.

Mr. Yanez said he abstained from voting because the Department of Environmental Quality is working on updating the waste management laws and an additional series of bills could come up.

And { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=281601&locid=1" } (R-Stevensville), chair of the committee, said he looks forward to working with Mr. Yanez on the issue, because he does not believe the bill increasing the fees will be the last piece of legislation on the issue.

The Michigan Waste and Recycling Association was opposed to the bill, saying it would increase the fines for all firms and all violations, including compost facilities and municipal properties.

Mr. Pscholka, however, said the fines have not been increased since 1987.

"This is not out of the ordinary," he said. "This is something we should have been doing all along."

Mr. Pscholka introduced the bill in response to ongoing odor issues and a citation by the DEQ for inadequate daily cover by the Orchard Hill Landfill in Southwest Michigan.

"Let's go have a barbeque in one of these neighborhoods," he said in a statement. "You have to have a real sense of what it is like to have this in your backyard, for years. If you're not willing to put a little more pressure on these bad actors, you're saying you'd be willing to put a down payment on a house here."

Civil Rights Could Again Select Former Commissioner

The Department of Civil Rights could potentially have three of its four most recent directors also be members of the commission that heads it.

Among the three candidates to be interviewed to succeed retiring { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=350501&locid=1" } is Agustin Arbulu, who succeeded Mr. Wesaw on the commission in January 2013. He left the commission earlier this month and has yet to be replaced.

Mr. Arbulu is president of Metro Care Services, which provides health care and legal consulting in the Detroit area.

The other Michigan candidate is Portia Roberson, who is group executive for ethics and civil rights for the city of Detroit. Ms. Roberson was among those interviewed when Mr. Wesaw was hired and was discussed as a Democratic candidate for attorney general for the 2014 election.

And Akia Haynes is deputy director and general counsel for the Indiana Civil Rights Commission, where she has served since January 2013. She has also served as a deputy attorney general for the state, as well as a private practice attorney.

Mr. Wesaw had been a member of the commission, and so had been Kelvin Scott, who served as director from February 2009 to February 2010 when he died. Both had served as chair of the commission.

House Panel Considering Regulation Of Charity Bins

What { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=360301&locid=1" }, chair of the House Local Government Committee, had thought would be a brief discussion turned contentious as local government groups raised concerns over his legislation to regulate charity donation bins.

All agreed the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was clear that the bins could not be prohibited (the court found they were charity speech and so protected under the First Amendment), but locals wanted to retain the right to oversee their location and maintenance.

Mr. Chatfield (R-Levering) said the goal of his bills ({ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB486201" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB486301" }) is to unify regulation of the bins, which allow people to leave clothing, books and other materials for the charity listed on the side.

Local governments had tried to ban the bins, arguing, as some still did Wednesday, that they attract not only legitimate donations but also trash dumping.

Suzanne Schultz, managing director of design, development and community engagement for the city of Grand Rapids, brought pictures of bins overflowing with various materials.

Ms. Schultz said allowing cities to control the locations through zoning would help, but she said communities needed to be able to issue civil infractions for bins that become a nuisance.

"Courts are not going to take this up if it's misdemeanors," she said, echoing others who had argued the penalties as laid out in the legislation would be too costly to enforce.

But Judy Allen with the Michigan Townships Association said limiting the location regulation to zoning would limit townships' ability to regulate the locations because of their lesser planning powers, and it could potentially leave some bins unregulated.

"Everyone who has a bin, they would be grandfathered in and be a nonconforming use," she said.

She also joined others in urging against a cap on the annual licensing fee. The bill provides for no more than $75, but since local governments cannot charge more than their costs anyway, she said taxpayers would have to subsidize the system if costs rise above that cap.

Mr. Chatfield said his goal with the bill was to create a system and uniformity across the state. But he also said the bills would allow communities to do some of the things their representatives had asked.

"If the bill doesn't prohibit it, there will be more things locals will be able to do," he said.

Officials with Planet Aid, which had been the defendant in the federal lawsuit, said the bill would allow their operations but would help to weed out those not caring for their bins.

Kai Nelson said his group checks its bins once a week and has systems in place to allow response within 24 hours if there is a problem reported.

But he said local government groups' call for agreements between the charity and the property owner are not necessarily workable. He said in many cases the properties where the group places collection boxes have absentee or corporate owners and a local property manager is the right person to make the agreement.

Mr. Nelson said the company would be open to provisions that would require even its existing boxes to be licensed and, if they do not meet siting requirements, moved. He said the company has already done that in some locales that have adopted regulatory ordinances.

Mr. Chatfield said he would continue to work with all of the parties to meet their concerns in the legislation.

TAX CAPTURE: In what was intended to be the primary focus of the meeting, libraries said any changes to tax increment financing authority laws have to allow them more say in captured taxes.

And Eric Lupher with the Citizens Research Council said the state needs to place more limits on the authorities.

"Libraries are having to return for more millages in the future when their revenues are being captured by tax increment finance authorities," Lance Werner with the Kent District Library, speaking for the Michigan Library Association, said. "We're living within our means but our means are being siphoned away."

He noted, for instance, that the Litchfield library loses 47 percent of its funds to tax capture.

Mr. Werner said the libraries did not object to all tax capture authorities, but they should be given more power to choose which ones are appropriate to get library revenue. Current law, he said, allows them to accept all or reject all.

"We want to work with the tax captures ... so we can explain to our investors where our money is going," he said.

He said libraries should also be permitted to opt-in for all authorities. He said some provide for library revenue to automatically be captured and require the libraries to opt out.

Mr. Lupher said future authorities need to be given a limited time to operate. While courts have ruled that tax capture for economic development is constitutional, he said TIFAs have morphed into something that might not be.

"They're being used for police and fire; they're being used for street fairs," he said.

And he said they are being routinely renewed instead of expiring when an intended project is completed.

"There should be some finality to this," he said, adding that in many cases there is also less accountability for the funds.

"Those revenues have just been pushed off budget and you don't hear about it," he said.

Mr. Lupher, pointing to issues raised with recent millages to support the Detroit Zoo and Detroit Institute of Arts, said existing authorities also should be limited to capturing the taxes that are in existence when the authority is created. To capture any new taxes should require creation of a new authority, he said.

REWARDS: The committee also began discussions on { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB429201" } , which would allow county commissions to approve up to $20,000 for rewards leading to arrests for certain crimes.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=321001&locid=1" } (R-Mason), sponsor of the bill, said in a recent incident where an Ingham County sheriff deputy was killed during a chase, the county was limited to offering $2,000 for information on the suspect, who had fled.

He said that limit was set in 1948.

"This money falls more in line with what the value of money is today," Mr. Cochran said of the bill. "This is a little more enticing to have people come forward."

Mr. Chatfield questioned whether the bill, which addresses only counties, should be expanded to cover other local governments under the same theory.

Senate Ends Deadline To Petition For DNA Test, Trial

The Senate voted unanimously Wednesday to eliminate the deadline in the law for a defendant convicted of a felony at trial, serving prison for that felony, to petition the court for DNA testing of biological material identified during an investigation that led to his or her conviction.

Those convicted of felonies may also request a new trial based on the results of that testing under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB15101" }. Currently, such a petition must be filed by January 1, 2016.

Only Michigan and Louisiana currently have sunsets on such provisions.

FIREFIGHTER CERTIFICATION: The Senate also approved { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB37201" }, which provides firefighter certification reciprocity with states that have the same certification as Michigan. The bill requires the state fire marshal to extend reciprocity certification to a firefighter from another state who seeks to work as a firefighter in Michigan as long as the individual was certified in another state after completing a program that meets or exceeds Michigan's standards.

"I have heard from many fire chiefs and local officials about how difficult and expensive it is to recruit and retain firemen in our local fire departments," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=276201&locid=1" } (R-Ida), sponsor of the bill, said in a statement. "Part of the problem is that Michigan currently does not recognize out-of-state firefighter certification. This legislation will improve our local fire departments ability to protect families and staff their departments at appropriate levels."

State Unemployment Rate Falls Below National Rate For First Time Since 2000

News that Michigan's unemployment rate fell to 5 percent in September, putting it below the national unemployment rate for the first time in 15 years, brought plenty of cheers Wednesday.

The national unemployment rate in September was 5.1 percent.

"We need to stay focused on our goal, but it also is important to look back to see how far we've come. Michigan's unemployment rate was once the worst in the United States," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" } said in a statement. "Today we are below the national average for the first time since August 2000. This means more people in Michigan are able to use their skills and are finding fulfilling jobs to support themselves and their families, making our cities and our communities stronger in a variety of ways."

Mr. Snyder posted a photo of him from 2000 on his Twitter feed with much less gray hair and a beard to commemorate the occasion.

Employment rose for the month by 10,000, and the labor force was up, too, by 3,000.

In the past year, the unemployment rate has fallen from 6.7 percent, and employment is up by 68,000.

"Since early 2015, several key labor market indicators have shown improvement in Michigan and in the nation," Jason Palmer, director of the Bureau of Labor Market Information and Strategic Initiatives, said in a statement. "Monthly unemployment rates in the state and nation have been comparable, as have over-the-year payroll job growth rates."

Bridge Authority Has 6 Potential Bidders

The Windsor-Detroit Bridge Authority announced Wednesday that six companies had responded to its request for qualifications to build the Gordie Howe International Bridge.

The authority is now submitting the qualifications to a review panel of authority members and experts to determine the three most qualified potential bidders.

"The private sector has shown a vibrant interest in working on the Gordie Howe International Bridge project, between this RFP, the responses we received to our recent RFP for early works, as well as the recently-held Industry Days," Mark McQueen, chair of the authority's board of directors, said in a statement. "Although site preparation has already begun for the eventual construction of the new Canadian Customs plaza, businesses and travelers on both sides of the border understand that the completion of the new bridge is dependent upon the successful conclusion of the pending RFP process."

Committee Roundup

SENATE APPROPRIATIONS: The Senate Appropriations Committee on Wednesday began taking testimony on reviewing boilerplate language that requires reports of agencies that spend more than $500,000 in new or expanded programs.

The first programs up for review were making Michigan a no-wait state for senior home-delivered meals and in-home services; child welfare performance-based funding; and the Ok2Say school safety hotline.

"This is harder work than passing budgets, is going back and checking and seeing if we're delivering on our promises," { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=277701&locid=1" } (R-Clarklake), whose idea it was to conduct such reviews, said in committee. "The intent of this is not necessarily to review why we did something. The intent is to review whether what we said we were going to accomplish is actually occurring."

By and large, Mr. Shirkey and other members of the committee requested more specific and detailed metrics, especially identifiable metrics like number comparisons, of all of the programs reviewed Wednesday. The committee expects to review another three programs next week, and chair { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=107701&locid=1" } (R-Lowell) recommended that members consider the practice for their own subcommittees when and where possible.

Capital Notebook

DEADLINE THURSDAY FOR LOCALS TO APPLY FOR GRANTS PROGRAM: Municipalities have until 11:59 p.m. Thursday to apply for the Financially Distressed Cities, Villages, and Townships grant program. Any city, village or township experiencing one or more conditions of "probable financial distress," under { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2011SB86501" }, the Local Financial Stability and Choice Act, is eligible to apply.

STATE CHRISTMAS TREE HAILS FROM WAKEFIELD: A 66-foot spruce from Wakefield in the Upper Peninsula will serve as the state's Christmas tree this year.

Florence Daniels is donating the tree to the state in memory of her husband, Jim Daniels, a former teacher and youth sports coach.

The tree will arrive October 31, and as per longtime tradition, be illuminated at the annual Silver Bells in the City celebration that Lansing holds to kick off the holiday season Friday, November 20.

MACMHB ANNOUNCES CEO: The executive board of the Michigan Association of Community Mental Health Boards has announced Robert Sheehan will lead the organization as chief executive officer effective immediately. Prior to his new role, he served for 18 years at the CEO of the Community Mental Health Authority of Clinton, Eaton and Ingham Counties.

Mr. Sheehan replaces Michael Vizena as CEO of MACMHB. Mr. Vizena is retiring.

"Behavioral health issues and intellectual/developmental disabilities affect so many of Michigan's residents, and are central to overall health, yet are often overlooked or stigmatized in the public eye," Mr. Sheehan said in a statement. "I look forward to the opportunity to work alongside the Association's members - hundreds of innovative provider and healthcare management organizations across the state - as they serve those in our communities with behavioral health issues and intellectual/developmental disabilities and their families."

LAND LEASES: The Department of Transportation will be leasing { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan.gov/documents/mdot/Ag_Lease_Sealed-Bid_Sale_Brochure_11-4-2015_10-7-15_502352_7.pdf" \t "blank" } of land around the state for agricultural use only.

The lease sale is scheduled for November 4 at 10 a.m. (doors open at 9 a.m.) at the Office of Aeronautics Auditorium at Capital City Airport, 2700 Port Lansing Road in Lansing.

Those interested in bidding must attend and provide a sealed bid for each parcel.

CASINO REVENUE: Two of the three Detroit casinos saw revenue increase both for the month of September and for the third quarter, the Gaming Control Board announced Wednesday.

MotorCity Casino saw the most growth, with the $35.7 million it collected in September representing a 7.5 percent increase over the same month in 2014. For third quarter, its revenue was up 3.6 percent over the same period in 2014.

MGM Grand Detroit was up 4.6 percent in September to $45.2 million and up 0.5 percent for the quarter.

Greektown Casino saw revenue decline 0.1 percent for the month to $26.6 million and 2.4 percent for the quarter.

MacGregor Zeroes In On Planned Parenthood Funding

The newly formed Senate Oversight Committee could begin meeting next Thursday to discuss funding to Planned Parenthood and how it relates to the reception of federal money by Michigan, the committee's chair told Gongwer News Service in a recent interview.

The close look at Planned Parenthood comes after Republicans were in an uproar over the summer about secretly recorded videos of various officials affiliated with the organization speaking about the organization's practice of providing fetal tissue from its abortions for research.

Although the Michigan extension of Planned Parenthood continues to deny any of its offices partake in such practices, Mr. MacGregor (R-Rockford) and his committee will take a deeper dive into the issue.

"We're trying to answer, is this happening in Michigan? Could it happen? And how it could be prevented from happening," Mr. MacGregor said. "I've been meeting with all the different groups involved with Planned Parenthood and how it relates to Title 10 dollars, other dollars, how they fit into community health and the rest of our state.

"I'm trying to get all the puzzle pieces of who it affects and how it affects so if decisions are made down the road on the state's use of Planned Parenthood, I'm informed as best (as possible) on how that's going to affect our state," Mr. MacGregor said.

Mr. MacGregor is the majority vice chair on the Senate Appropriations Health and Human Services Subcommittee.

When Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=151101&locid=1" } (R-West Olive) created the committee in mid-September, he pointed to Mr. MacGregor as the perfect choice to lead such a committee.

Asked about that, Mr. MacGregor said: "I think the Senate majority leader and others realize that a lot of times it's not what you know, it's how you listen, and I tend to pride myself on being a good listener. In the private sector, my motto is listen, commit and follow through, and I try and use that as a legislator.

"I'm going to do a lot of listening with the Oversight committee, and from there, we'll commit to our citizens that, if there needs to be some change or something has to have a spotlight on it, we'll do that," he said, though noting that may not always be solely his decision. Rather, a "team decision" on what he, his team and the majority leader agree could end up on the docket.

Although Mr. MacGregor told Gongwer the committee's purpose is to "be able to look at issues in front of the Legislature or state government (that) doesn't relate to any bill that's hanging out there," there has been several anti-abortion type bills sent to the committee so far.

Those bills are { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB56401" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB56501" }, related to abortion compensation; { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB57301" } requiring DHHS to specify a facility must be licensed as a freestanding surgical outpatient facility and prohibiting abortions from said facilities until it becomes licensed; and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015SB57501" }, which requires the state to "refrain from allocating funds to an entity that considers an elective abortion to be part of the continuum of health care for the purposes of family planning or comprehensive reproductive health services," as well as prohibits state or federal funds to an entity performing more than 120 abortions per year.

Mr. MacGregor said the committee's first hearing has been posted for the first Thursday the Legislature is back in session in December, December 3. Although the committee would typically meet at 8:30 a.m., it had not yet officially noticed for that date, so that is subject to change.

FLINT WATER CRISIS: Mr. MacGregor said he's had several colleagues give suggestions on what topics his Oversight Committee should look into, but he will not make those decisions in a vacuum, he said. "These decisions are made in conjunction with leadership."

"I will consider any topic that someone puts in front of me, but I'm not going to use the Oversight Committee to trump another Senate member," Mr. MacGregor said when asked if he would consider a suggestion recently by Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=106601&locid=1" } (D-Flint) to review what happened in Flint and how it came into its current water crisis where lead has found its way into the tap water.

And other priorities could inevitably come up, he said. Preference, of course, would be given to members of the committee, which include Senate { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=18801&locid=1" } (R-White Lake Township), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=83401&locid=1" } (R-Lawton), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=210301&locid=1" } (R-Midland) and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=209301&locid=1" } (D-Southfield) in addition to Mr. MacGregor.

"Sitting on Appropriations is also a concern, that we'll be getting in the budget cycle, so I want to give each topic the appropriate time and attention that's needed," Mr. MacGregor said. "It could be busy early winter here. We may reduce the time we're going to meet when the budget starts to come around, so timing is going to be key, because I don't want to shortchange any one of the issues that come up."

Singh Defends Refugee Vetting Process

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=322301&locid=1" } on Monday called the country's vetting process for refugees extremely comprehensive and said he disagrees with { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=245801&locid=1" }'s "pause" on working to bring Syrian refugees into the state following terrorism attacks in Paris.

"One of the areas that I have long agreed with Governor Snyder on is the need for Michigan to be a welcoming state that encourages immigration and cultural diversity," Mr. Singh said in an email to supporters. "That is why I was profoundly disappointed to hear Governor Snyder call for a 'pause' on bringing Syrian refugees to Michigan. Fear has overtaken cool-headed, rational thought."

Mr. Singh is a board member for the Refugee Development Center in Lansing. He said the vetting process in the United States is comprehensive and conducted by the United Nations and the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. The process takes between one year and three years and includes in-person interviews and multiple background checks, Mr. Singh wrote.

"As elected officials, we should be using our platform to educate people and make sound decisions based on facts rather than creating fear to move forward a political agenda," he said.

Mr. Snyder decided to suspend state efforts to bring more refugees from Syria to settle in the state in the wake of terrorist attacks in Paris and Lebanon. He has said it is a temporary move while the federal government reviews its vetting procedures.

Mr. Snyder has made a big point during his nearly five years in office of labeling himself the most pro-immigration governor in the country. And in the wake of the Syrian civil war, now raging for four years, hundreds of thousands of Syrians have fled the country as refugees, some 200,000 to Europe and another 4 million in other Middle East countries, according to the United Nations.

The governor's administration had been working with Lutheran Social Services of Michigan to intensify the state's efforts to place Syrian refugees, but those will now be put on hold as the governor awaits response from the U.S. Department of Homeland Security to his request for a review of its procedures on vetting refugees to enter the country to determine whether strengthening is needed.

Snyder spokesperson Dave Murray did not say if Mr. Snyder has made a decision on what he thinks of the vetting process.

"Governor Snyder continues to be engaged in discussions with the departments of State and Homeland Security," Mr. Murray said. "Our priority is to keep Michiganders safe, and Governor Snyder continues to work to get answers to the questions and concerns expressed by Michigan residents."

Mr. Singh said as a member of the Refugee Development Center, he knows the refugees who come to Michigan are decent and hard-working people.

"These families come here often after fleeing unimaginable horrors that few of us could imagine," he wrote. "They come here to escape persecution, protect their loved ones and live without fear."

MSEA, AFSCME Ratify New Contract, Other Unions Still Voting

Two of the five major unions representing state government employees have ratified the proposed new contract.

The Michigan State Employees Association counted votes last Thursday and announced the results Friday.

"I would like to thank all the members who participated in the democratic process of voting on the tentative agreement," MSEA President Ken Moore said in a statement. "Participation is what makes us union strong."

American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Council 25 members ratified the contract shortly after the announcement of a tentative agreement, said Nick Ciaramitaro, AFSCME director of legislation and public policy.

The other major unions are still voting. Ballots from members of the United Auto Workers Local 6000, the largest union of state employees, will be counted December 11. They are due December 10.

The ballots from the Service Employees International Union 517m are due December 2 and will be counted the same day.

Ballots for the Michigan Corrections Organization will be counted November 30.

Under the tentative agreement the state reached with unions in October, there would be a one-year contract for wages and health care starting October 1, 2016, that provides a 1 percent base wage increase, and 1.5 percent lump sum payment for employees in October 2016.

Other portions of the contracts would last the traditional three years. However, the Office of State Employer pushed for a one-year deal on the wages and health care components out of concern about what will happen with the federal excise tax on premium health care plans, MCO said in an October bulletin to its members.

That is the so-called Cadillac tax in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. Under that law, starting with the 2018 tax year, if the aggregate cost of the health care coverage an employer provides exceeds a statutory dollar limit, then the excess is subject to a 40 percent excise tax.

State officials have said they will not comment on the new contract until the ratification process concludes.

Juvenile Justice Reforms Won't Be Reported Until 2016

The House Criminal Justice Committee is taking up a 20-bill package making various reforms to the juvenile justice system in the state - including ending the practice of automatically trying all 17 year-olds as adults - but the committee chair said the bills won't clear the committee until next year.

Michigan is one of only nine states to automatically consider juveniles who are 17 as adults for criminal offenses. Another bill in the package would prohibit the placement of youth under the age of 18 in adult jails and prisons and provide access to "age appropriate" rehabilitation.

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=266001&locid=1" } (R-Plymouth Township), chair of the Criminal Justice Committee, said he will take testimony on the legislation at its December 1 meeting, and possibly the week after.

"I think that these are important bills, and it is something I certainly want to see happen," Mr. Heise said Monday. "I also think it is consistent with the governor's smart justice message. But I want to take our time on it; I want to do a good job and not rush it."

The bills were introduced in October and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=263501&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) has helped lead the charge on the reforms. Recently he launched a website promoting the legislation: { HYPERLINK "http://www.raisetheagemi.org/" \t "blank" }.

The other bills in the package would:

- Increase the County Child Care Fund reimbursement rate for qualifying community-based services for youth by 25 percent;
- Omit bank or safe robbery, escape from a juvenile facility and drug possession or delivery of up to 1,000 grams from the list of specified juvenile offenses;
- Require equal consideration of all mitigating factors prior to waiving jurisdiction in traditional juvenile waiver cases;
- Require public monitoring and oversight of youth under the jurisdiction of the Department of Corrections who entered for an offense committed prior to turning 18 years old;

- Ensure age-appropriate programming and outdoor exercise for youth under 21 years old in administrative segregation in prison; and

- Establish a family advisory board within the Department of Corrections to ensure effective partnerships with families and victims.

The bill numbers are { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB494701" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB494801" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495001" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495101" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495201" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495301" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495401" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495501" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495601" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495701" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495801" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB495901" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB496001" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB496101" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB496201" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB496301" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB496401" } , { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB496501" } and { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=legislation_billdetail.cfm&billid=2015HB496601" } .

Conyers Announces Campaign For 27th Term

{ HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=5601&locid=1" } announced Monday that he is seeking to hold his place as the longest-serving current member of Congress, and he already has a long list of supporters in that effort.

Mr. Conyers, 86, will face a fight for the Democratic nomination in the heavily Democratic seat from Detroit City Clerk Janice Winfrey, who announced in September that she would challenge Mr. Conyers in the 13th U.S. House District.

Still, other potentially strong challengers in recent years have made little dent in Mr. Conyers' support base. He has won renomination in landslides.

"I'm running for another term in Congress because there are fights yet to be won," Mr. Conyers (D-Detroit) said in a statement announcing his re-election bid. "Winning full employment, health care for all, and protection of the right to vote won't be easy, but I know the type of leadership that it will take to fight and win these battles."

Mr. Conyers touted both his work in Congress and his efforts in the community as reason to keep him in office.

In Congress, he said he continues work on jobs, including continuing to introduce the Humphrey-Hawkins 21st Century Full Employment and Training Act to provide job training for all residents.

He said he was also a leading force behind recent revisions to surveillance policies.

In the community, he has continued to oppose emergency management in Detroit, and other communities, and has worked with community leaders to prevent water shut-offs, he said.

Mr. Conyers saw endorsements from the state elected officials in the district: { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=308601&locid=1" } (D-Dearborn Heights), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161801&locid=1" } (D-Highland Park), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=161201&locid=1" }I (D-Detroit), Rep. Brian Banks (D-Detroit), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=259701&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=189001&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=104001&locid=1" } (D-Detroit), { HYPERLINK "http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=263501&locid=1" } (D-Detroit) and { HYPERLINK

"http://www.gongwer.com/index.cfm?link=bio.cfm&nameid=264501&locid=1" } (D-Allen Park).

He also saw support from Detroit City Councilmembers Janee Ayers and George Cushingberry, as well as Oakland County Commissioner Nancy Quarles.

Mr. Conyers' biggest problem in 2014 was a lackluster campaign operation that nearly botched his place on the ballot with insufficient valid signatures. He appears more organized this time around, having hired the Grassroots Midwest political consulting firm.

Juvenile Overdose Deaths Tripled In Michigan, Report Says

With federal and state officials working to better track drug overuse, a national report said drug overdose deaths among young people in Michigan had tripled in just over a decade.

The results from Michigan were among the worst, though not the worst, of findings from the states as the study looked at steps states are taking to help ensure young adults, teens and younger kids do not get access to drugs and alcohol.

The report said 35 states had seen the rate of deaths among young people more than double or more from 2001 to 2011-13. Michigan was one of 12 states where the death rate had tripled.

The { HYPERLINK "http://healthyamericans.org/assets/files/TFAH-2015-TeenSubstAbuse%20FINAL.pdf" \t "blank" }, from the Trust for America's Health, said that from 1999 to 2001, not one state had a rate of overdose of deaths of more than 6.1 percent per 100,000 population of younger people.

Now, 33 states had had death rates that exceeded 6.1 percent per 100,000 of people aged between 12 and 25.

The report did not have any raw totals on the actual number of deaths in Michigan or nationally related to drug overdoses of young people.

However, a 2014 report from the then Department of Community Health - now the Department of Health and Human Services - said that in 2012 there were 941 deaths from drug overdoses of people of any age in Michigan.

In 1999, that same report said, there were 235 deaths from drug overdoses.

The report from Trust for America's Health said that in 1999-2001, drug overdose deaths of people aged 12 to 25 in Michigan was 2.1 percent for each 100,000 people in that age group.

By 2011 to 2103, the death rate for those young people from drug overdoses had had gone to 8.1 percent. For males it was 11 percent, and for females it was 5.1 percent.

The death rate involved all drugs, including illegal drugs such as heroin and prescription drug abuse.

Along with Michigan, the death rate tripled during that time frame in Arkansas, Delaware, Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New York, Oklahoma, Utah and West Virginia.

Overall, the Great Lakes did not do well in terms of low percentages of drug overdose deaths of young people. Minnesota had the lowest rate among them at 5.7 percent, followed by New York at 6.9 percent. Michigan was the third-lowest, followed by Illinois at 8.2 percent, Wisconsin at 8.8 percent, Ohio at 9.1 percent, Indiana at 9.6 percent and Pennsylvania at 11.8 percent.

Overall, North Dakota had the lowest rate at 2.2 percent. West Virginia had the highest at 12.6 percent.

Michigan also did not rank highly, according to the national group, in terms of steps it took to discourage young people from obtaining and using drugs and other substances. Out of 10 proposed actions the report proposed, the state uses five (Minnesota with the lowest rate in the Great Lakes states uses all 10).

According to the report, Michigan also did not have at least 80 percent of its high school students graduate; it did not have in place comprehensive laws to prevent bullying; it did not increase funding for mental health services; and it did not have in place billing codes in health insurance for screening and referral to programs, nor did it have in place yet immunity for good Samaritan actions.

Last month, a state task force did call for the state to take steps to update its Michigan Automated Prescription System to help track down potential prescription drug overuse.

Despite Job Growth, Report Says Michigan Is Low Prosperity State

After nearly a decade of struggling in a single-state recession, and then fighting with the rest of the United States through the Great Recession, Michigan has become a leader in terms of job growth. But its drop in overall per capita income and lower number of adults actually working, as well as a low number of persons with college degrees, means the state has become a low-prosperity state, a report issued by the organization Michigan Future Incorporated argued.

And the report said that continuing to improve the state toward higher-education attainment and a focus on the service sectors of the economy that rely on higher-skilled individuals is needed for the state to move into a knowledge-based economy that has a higher prosperity profile.

The report was prepared by Lou Glazer, president of Michigan Future, and Don Grimes at the Institute for Research on Labor, Employment and the Economy at the University of Michigan. The report was funded by the Hudson-Webber Foundation.

Mr. Glazer, a former state official, has long urged the state put a greater focus on improving educational outcomes and increasing the number of residents with college degrees.

The { HYPERLINK "http://michiganfuture.org/cms/assets/uploads/2015/11/Michigan-Future_2015-Report.pdf" \t "blank" } acknowledges Michigan has in the last five years been a national leader in terms of overall job growth.

And a forecast issued last week by the Research Seminar for Quantitative Economics at U-M said job growth for the state should continue over the next two years.

But the report also said growth in the auto industry, which once fueled greater prosperity in the state, is no longer enough.

States that are considered high prosperity tend to have a large number of knowledge-based service sector jobs in insurance, finance, health care, education, information and corporate management, as well as a large number of residents with at least a four-year degree.

However, Michigan ranks 34th in the nation with the number of individuals with four-year degrees. It also ranks 26th in terms of total wages stemming from high-knowledge industries.

The two largest regions in the state also lag the nation in terms of higher education attainment, the report said.

Metro Detroit stood 42nd in terms of population with four-year degrees and 33rd in proportion of wages earned in knowledge-based industries.

Grand Rapids was 34th in terms of those with four-year degrees and 52nd in terms of wages earned in knowledge companies.

The state has also lagged other states in terms of income growth. At the beginning of the 21st Century Michigan, was 17th in terms of overall per capita income. By 2013, the state had fallen to 37th in terms of per capita income.

And while the state's unemployment rate is down, Michigan ranks low in terms of the total percentage of adults between the ages of 25 and 64 who are working. Michigan now ranks 42nd in terms of total adults with a job, the report indicated.

Audit Cites Veterans Affairs For Maintenance Program

While the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs' maintenance program is at least moderately effective, Auditor General Doug Ringler said in a report issued Monday, the lack of central records left both building condition and overall preparedness in question.

The { HYPERLINK "http://www.audgen.michigan.gov/finalpdfs/15_16/r511020015.pdf" \t "blank" }, for the period October 1, 2012, through May 31, 2015, of the Construction and Facilities Management Office found that its efforts to maintain facilities was only moderately effective because it lacked a central maintenance record.

Auditors noted that inspections in 2014 found a number of maintenance issues that could have been prevented with earlier work.

Officials said they were working to develop a centralized maintenance tracking system, but were hampered by lack of resources.

Auditors also cited the office for not properly tracking installation status reports, which indicate the readiness state of each of the state's 43 armories. Auditors reviewed 16 of the 90 reports filed for fiscal years 2012-13 and 2013-14, and found half did not include supporting documentation.

In six of the reports, the rating in the final report did not match the scores in the supporting documents, with two of those being typing errors.

The office said it met National Guard Bureau reporting requirements, but would develop a better system for storing the reports and related documentation.

The report said the office was effective at administering construction and maintenance projects, particularly noting its ongoing five-year capital outlay budget to keep projects prioritized.

But auditors, in reviewing 15 sample projects, found the office had not kept copies of 54 of the 127 documents tied to those projects showing contractors were complying with requirements. The office also had not documented on-site inspections for six of the 15 projects.

The office said it was developing processes to better collect and track the reports.

HP Turns Over Source Code To State

Hewlett Packard met a judge-imposed deadline of 5 p.m. Friday to turn over the source code for information technology projects it had been pursuing for the Department of State, a department spokesperson said Monday.

A week ago, a Kent Circuit judge ordered HP Enterprise Services to turn over the source code for the ExpressSOS website, the Penske application and current data migration code, saying it was clear the code belonged to the state. The department cancelled HP's contract for the Business Application Modernization project after years of delays and problems.

The department warned that without the state having the source code, the entire online system, which thousands of residents use to renew license plates and conduct other business, was at risk of crashing.

MANISTEE CHILD CARE SUSPENSION: The Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, Bureau of Community and Health Systems, has summarily suspended and issued a notice of intent to revoke the license of a Manistee County child care center provider, Suzanne Hamilton, of the Manistee Historic Red School House CDC child care center.

Ms. Hamilton has held a license to operate a child care center since January 2013 for 60 children, but effective immediately, she may no longer operate her child care center at 284 First Street or at any other location. She may no longer accept children for care after that date and must inform all of the parents of children in her care that her license has been suspended and she can no longer provide care.

LARA did not indicate why her license will be revoked, only saying the action came as a result of a recent investigation of a complaint into the child care center she operates.

DTE GAS CUSTOMER INCREASE: Residential natural gas customers of DTE Gas Company will see an increase of 19 cents on their monthly bills effective July 2016 as a result of an approved expansion of the company's gas main replacement program by the Public Service Commission.

The expansion is to enable the utility to replace more miles of gas main and will result in an increase in spending in 2016 and 2017, the PSC said in a statement (Case U-17701).

"Replacing higher risk and poorer performing gas mains will continue the MPSC's focus on enhancing safety and reliability for customers and reduce the risk of failures or leaks," said PSC Chair John Quackenbush.

DEQ WEBSITE: The Department of Environmental Quality has redesigned its { HYPERLINK "http://www.michigan.gov/deq" \t "blank" } to be more user-friendly.

The site includes scrolling highlights, links to recent news releases and buttons for each of its divisions.

The home page also includes a link to environmental emergency reporting processes.

WOLF POACHING: The Department of Natural Resources announced Monday it is offering a reward for information leading to the conviction of the person who shot a wolf in Houghton County over the weekend. Officials said the poacher likely shot from a vehicle parked along M-26 south of Twin Lakes on Saturday.

Conviction for the poaching is a misdemeanor carrying up to 90 days in jail, $1,000 in fines and $1,500 in restitution to the state.

Threat that closed Los Angeles schools being investigated as hoax

The abrupt closure of the second-largest school district in the country occurred after a threat was made late Monday via emails to several school board members, which mentioned an attack by "explosive devices" as well as "assault rifles and machine pistols," L.A. Police Department Chief Charlie Beck said.

Subject: FW: Time sensitive-Flint Schools Data Importance: High

Hello. I need a data file ASAP for the governor's office. I pulled what I need from EEM, but the format is horrendous and I would be structuring for hours (manually).

The attached item from CS is not what they want, but a good attempt. I think they want the following:

All ISD, LEA, PSA and Nonpublic Schools and Programs ACTIVE in Flint (physical entities, not the district, but the schools and ancillary facilities). I need the name of the entity, the physical address, the grades and programs in operation (so they can prioritize using this info). An XML file is attached that I think gets close, but parses out the info I queried line by line. Would take hours to physically manipulate.

Hi Tom,

I believe Maggie from DEQ left you a voicemail on this, but the Governors office needs some data CEPI provided on Flint Schools broken down in greater detail. This is time-sensitive and related to discussions involving the Flint water situation that are happening at a fast pace. Can you please assist?

No problem on the heat map. The OAG is currently doing an audit there and I believe have included Flint in their sample to test. I will double check.

I am thinking we should move this from the yellow into the red on our heat map for DEQ - just slightly up. (Reviewing that now)

The positive is we categorized it correctly and addressed on the heat map as number 1.

Bryan - I think Doug indicated they may be doing something or will be doing - we have an OAG check mark (may be in process) or something will start - may be worth a quick call to see what they have planned so we can have an answer when asked.

Michigan Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) Director Dan WYANT today admitted staffers in his department mishandled the city of Flint's water situation, pointing to departmental issues with experience and protocol in corrosion control efforts.

Wyant said in a statement that staff used a federal protocol they believed was appropriate. Those testing steps "would have been correct for a city less than 50,000 people, but not for a city of nearly 100,000," he said.

In response to that finding, DEQ Chief Deputy Jim SYGO was named the interim chief of the department's Office of Drinking Water and Municipal Assistance.

Wyant said he was convinced the staff involved in the program believed they were doing their job right, and that the state took appropriate steps once it became clear there could be a health threat to Flint residents.

"We are now embarked on an unprecedented effort to safeguard Flint residents and families with near-term, intermediate and long-term actions to protect and educate city residents," he said. "We will learn from this. We will make necessary changes to see to it that our program becomes a national leader in public health protection."

In addition to the staffing change, Gov. Rick SNYDER has reportedly called for an independent, third party after-action review. The department is also working with the federal government and is "committed to being part of the U.S. EPA's effort to strengthen its Lead and Copper Rule," Wyant said.

"All who brought this issue to the department deserve credit for bringing it forward," he added. "Lead is a serious issue, particularly for young people, and we take it seriously."

MDHHS releases latest data outlining blood lead levels in Flint

Follow-up care, case management resources continue for families

LANSING, Mich. – Preliminary data indicates that 30 of 1,361 adults and children tested in Flint since October 1 had elevated blood lead levels, according to a report issued today by the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services.

This marks the first summary report on lead testing called for in the state's action plan related to health concerns about Flint's water infrastructure.

"Our goal is to help families reduce their exposure to lead sources," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We have made progress in testing and identifying those with elevated blood lead levels, and the department will continue to work closely with the Genesee County Health Department to reach these families. We will remain diligent in our ongoing outreach and education efforts."

Information comes from tests administered citywide to 1,361 children and adults since October 1. Tests showed that 21 of 969 children age 17 or younger and 9 of 392 adults over the age 18 were identified with elevated blood lead levels.

The report covers test results reported to MDHHS since the state action plan was put in place Oct. 2. It includes the number of tests and number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter, and captures both capillary and venous blood tests that have been reported to MDHHS since the beginning of October. People who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Five micrograms per deciliter is the level that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention considers elevated and triggers health care professional follow up with families.

The full report is posted online at www.michigan.gov/flintwater and will be updated as more data becomes available.

When reviewing historical trend data, the risk of lead exposure is highest during the third quarter of each year – July through September. Seasonal variation is the result of a number of factors including increased exposure to lead in dust and soil in the summer months.

In the third quarter of 2010, 8.3 percent of Flint children 6 and under showed elevated blood lead levels. The figure gradually decreased to 4.1 percent in the third quarter of 2013. During the same months in 2014, the figure increased to 7.5 percent and decreased to 6.4 percent in the third quarter of 2015.

Last month, MDHHS collaborated with the county health department and local partners to distribute educational resources and informational letters to Flint parents regarding lead testing. The state is providing funding for GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level has been detected. During these follow-up visits, nurses coordinate with environmental health investigators to meet with families in their homes to identify lead exposures, address questions and provide water filters. People can be exposed to lead from paint, soil, plumbing and other sources.

MDHHS continues to provide free water filters and replacement cartridges to Flint residents at four locations, including the MDHHS Flint offices and the Genesee County Community Action Resource Department. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

MDHHS releases latest round of Flint blood lead level data

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its newest summary report on lead testing in Flint. According to preliminary data, 39 of 1,836 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"As testing continues, our focus remains on helping families reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "We are working closely with the Genesee County Health Department to provide information and offer tools in the community, and encourage families to explore the resources that are available to them."

Both capillary and venous blood tests are included in the report, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS is working closely with local partners to offer resources and distribute important lead testing and prevention information. Additional state funding has allowed for Genesee County Health Department (GCHD) nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected. These families can also choose to have the nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources.

To support these efforts, the state is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities on enhanced screening and testing. In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS has recommended blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are still available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Updated summary report on Flint blood lead level data now available

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services today issued its bi-weekly summary report on lead testing in Flint. Preliminary data indicate that 43 of 2,182 adults and children tested had elevated blood lead levels since Oct. 1.

"In partnership with the Genesee County Health Department, we are working to engage and provide resources to residents to reduce all potential exposures to lead," said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. "Case management and home lead analysis are available for families in which an elevated blood lead level has been detected."

The first MDHHS summary report on blood lead levels in Flint was issued Dec. 3, 2015. Updated reports are posted on a bi-weekly basis on the www.michigan.gov/flintwater website. After refining our methods to identify age, some people are now counted in a different age group than on previous reports. The total counts for each year have not changed.

The report includes both capillary and venous blood tests, and people who have had multiple tests are counted only once. Tests and their results cover the time since the state action plan was put in place on Oct. 2, and capture the number of elevated blood lead levels greater than 5 micrograms per deciliter.

MDHHS, together with the Genesee County Health Department (GCHD), is working with local partners to distribute educational information around lead testing and prevention. Supplemental state dollars are funding GCHD nurses to work with families when an elevated blood lead level is detected.

Families with an elevated blood lead level can also choose to have a nurse coordinate an environmental health investigation in their home to help identify lead exposures, which could be lead from paint, soil, plumbing, and other sources. Families with questions about their blood lead levels or test results are also encouraged to contact their primary care physician or local health department.

In addition to mandated testing at ages one and two for the Medicaid population, MDHHS is coordinating with its Medicaid health plans and provider communities to recommend blood lead testing for any child younger than six years of age in Flint who has not previously been tested. The state, in coordination with GCHD, developed and issued a Health Alert Network (HAN) notification for local providers to help ensure consistent messaging and protocols among primary care providers.

Free water filters and replacement cartridges are available to Flint residents. For a full list of locations and hours of distribution, or to view the full blood lead level report, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater. The summary will be updated as more data becomes available.

To help residents properly install water filters, and to demonstrate how to replace the original when it expires, MDHHS has created an instructional video on its YouTube channel. For this and other updates, visit www.michigan.gov/flintwater.

Phelps Bill Would Make Manipulating Data A Felony State employees who are caught manipulating data could be convicted of a felony under legislation Rep. Phil Phelps plans to introduce, he announced Monday.
Mr. Phelps (D-Flushing) said in a statement the legislation prevents government corruption by making it a felony for any state employee to knowingly manipulate data that would change the outcome of an official report. The felony would be punishable by up to five years in prison.
"As we began to comb through all of the facts surrounding Flint's water crisis it was frightening to learn that there were very few laws on our books that protect the public from potential government abuse such as data manipulation," Mr. Phelps said. "I am not sure if anyone involved in the Flint water crisis deliberately changed or removed critical data in state reports, but I am absolutely certain that it should be a crime if it did happen."
Mr. Phelps said he plans on introducing the legislation when the House resumes session next week.
"Protecting Michigan residents should be our highest priority, yet the Auditor General recently noted that potential bad actors in our government merely stand to lose their jobs, even if they put innocent lives in jeopardy," he said. "As elected leaders we must send out a signal to everyone letting them know that we will not tolerate this form of injustice."

Wayne and Washtenaw counties both have world-class medical facilities, yet the health gap between residents is the widest in the state, with a six-year-difference in life expectancy for men. A new study looks at health disparities across Michigan, and highlights the sometimes tenuous connection between health and health care.

Flanagan Hopes To Expand Reform Beyond EAA

Sometime after the first of the year, some schools will be moved from the authority of their home district to a reform entity, but where is still in some flux, Superintendent of Public Instruction Mike Flanagan told Gongwer News Service in a recent interview.

Mr. Flanagan said he is still on track to move some schools that had "flatlined" out of their home district. He had hoped initially to keep that group to less than 10 schools, but now he said it will likely be something more than that, though he was not ready to disclose how many.

He acknowledged those who saw more than 10 as a substantial number, but said it is relative.

"It's only a handful out of 4,000," he said. "For the kids in that handful, it's serious."

And right now, those schools will likely go to the Education Achievement Authority.

"For now, the EAA is the only operating entity," he said. "I'd like to have ISDs and possibly school districts themselves and possibly some others."

Superintendent of Public Instruction Mike Flanagan

He said he was disappointed that the House failed to concur in legislation (HB 4369*) that could have confirmed his authority both to look to the EAA to operate those schools and possibly to other entities, so he is now working to find the limits of current law.

Mr. Flanagan said he is consulting with the Department of Attorney General to determine if he has the authority to pass buildings through the School Reform/Redesign District to intermediate school districts or if the EAA is the only option.

To those who see the EAA as untested, Mr. Flanagan also agreed. "I get the common sense that (it is) not proven yet," he said.

But he also said much of the territory of trying to turn schools around is untested, including the ISDs where he would like to be able to send those schools.

"They're proven as ISDs, but they're not necessarily proven as turnaround agents," he said.

"On the other hand, these kids have been in schools for decades that there's no performance gains," he said. "The part that's proven where they are isn't working."

Mr. Flanagan said the state would have some additional data on the EAA and some observations on its effectiveness as early as the end of this school year.

He said there was much additional research to do. For instance, he agreed with opponents that the EAA has lost students since last school year. And he agreed with opponents that the loss could be the result of the EAA's program, though maybe a different part.

Opponents have in recent days hit the EAA for losing some 25 percent of its students (a charge EAA officials dispute), quoting parents who moved their students because the program in the schools was not effective.

Mr. Flanagan said he had heard instances where students moved because they did not want to be in school the number of days the EAA operates.

There is also still some fleshing out needed on the process of transferring schools, Mr. Flanagan said. "I definitely want this piece to be fair to the districts," he said.

A key missing piece, he said, is returning schools back to their home district. "I want to have a sense of how they would go back to their district, through law or if we have some way to do that," he said.

Mr. Flanagan also bristled at those who said he was playing politics with his announcement on moving schools to the reform district. The law, he said, required three years of data.

While technically the law would allow some schools to be transferred to the reform district now, Mr. Flanagan said he is waiting until next year to give a little more time to vet those that appear eligible.

"We want to get this right," he said. "This is very serious."

Though any school in the bottom 5 percent could be eligible, he said he is targeting the effort to those that have "flatlined". That will be more than 10 schools statewide, but he declined to put a number on it.

Districts should expect at some point to get those schools back, Mr. Flanagan said, but none involved should expect it to be a quick process. He noted that the auto industry started flagging in the 1970s. "How long did it take them to turn around?" he said. "They didn't have quality cars for at least a decade."

He also cautioned on making comparisons. "If we're 17th in math, we have to do better," he said of international score comparisons.

But some of those scores are the result of cultural advantages, he said. "Korean parents, it's just shown, are very much into outside tutoring," he said. "So how much of their gains is based on their system?"

And Mr. Flanagan said the state has been improving.

"I think we're in the right direction," he said. "ACT scores are going up; percent reading at grade level is going up. I mean this is incremental work, but it is going in the right direction."

Too many unfair comparisons, he said, can be demoralizing to the point that the best and brightest choose not to be teachers, he said.

GOALS FOR NEXT YEAR: Mr. Flanagan also plans to next year work with others in the administration on a "Marshall Plan" for struggling schools.

"I do think it's about resources, targeted, not across the board, to schools that need them the most," he said.

Where those resources will be targeted is still under discussion, he said, with a schedule to announce the plan mid-year.

Some of the effort will be for deficit districts, helping them to get their budgets in balance.

Mr. Flanagan acknowledged a recent Citizens Research Council of Michigan report showing some of the state's efforts on deficit districts were essentially shifting that debt across the state. "I do know that's the math," he said, adding he was not entirely familiar with the issue.

Once the plan is ready, Mr. Flanagan said it will take selling both the Legislature, to put in additional funds, and the school community, to accept those funds.

He said state revenues are improving so there should be money available, and he is hoping for the same reception as he saw for the early childhood funding increases. There would definitely be sufficient resources if it adopted a sales tax on services as it should, he said.

But he said school districts would also have to be willing to accept funds with some substantial strings attached.

"Some say it should be across the board," he said of any funding increases. "We're not going to make the progress in the toughest schools if we do that.

"It's an issue of what's fair," he said, noting studies showing substantial numbers of students in some districts coming into kindergarten not knowing their letters and numbers. "You can't say to get those kids reading by third grade is the same foundation amount that it would be for a district where the kids come in having been read to."

The early childhood programs will help to resolve some of that, he said, but the program currently does not offer enough slots to fully resolve the issue.

Among the targets for the funds could be teacher salaries, he suggested. "I do think long term we need to think about supplementary compensation for teachers in the hardest places to teach," he said.

Mr. Flanagan said he still holds that teacher pay needs to be on par with engineers and other highly-educated, high-wage professions. While some districts have the funds to push those wages into six figures, he said many of the districts struggling most academically and financially do not.

As to overall increases in education spending, he said, "I'm just reluctant to jump on the resources bandwagon."

There is still room for districts to consolidate to save money, he said, pointing to Willow Run and Ypsilanti as a successful example. "It does take community thought," he said.

"If I was given the authority to draw the lines, there would be many fewer," he said.

The goal of consolidation, he said, is not necessarily closing schools, but is reducing administrative overhead.

He noted, for instance, Barry County has two school districts with about 4,000 total students. Those districts, he said, could be blended into districts in neighboring Kent and Calhoun counties, cutting administrative costs both at the district and ISD level.

On the other side, he pointed to the district around Tahquamenon Falls that has few students but is already geographically large.

The department will also be, over the next year, continuing its work on improving teacher training.

But he said professional development for those already in the field should be left to the ISDs, which he said are already doing that job well. He pointed particularly to Wayne Regional Educational Services Agency. "They've got a good system to get teachers up to speed," he said.

For those ISDs struggling in that area: "If they don't, they should consolidate."

Mr. Flanagan is also preparing to wind down his time as superintendent, expecting to retire from the post in July 2015.

That, he said, leaves the next year to push for some final initiatives, like the Marshall Plan, and six months in 2015 to tie up any loose ends.

He is also, though, hedging that he might have some new initiatives in those final months, though not of his own volition. "So who knows what's going to be handed to me," he said. "That's a new part of this job I didn't have the first couple of years, which is what's the New Year's surprise?"

He noted, for instance, that dissolving school districts was not one of his planned initiatives for the past year. Rather, it was an effort given to him by the Legislature.

READING: Mr. Flanagan also announced an effort to generate private donations to help with reading development.

"There are too many people, including children and adults, who cannot read," he said. "We need to change that. To help build a culture of reading in Michigan, we need to get books in their hands and in their homes."

The proposal would create a single system that would consolidate various donations toward providing children's books for low-income families.

Michigan to coordinate donations to support reading

Education officials in Michigan are planning an effort to coordinate private donations to help build a culture of reading in the state.

The announcement comes from state Superintendent Mike Flanagan. He is embarking on an effort to coordinate a single system for individuals; businesses; and groups, clubs and civic organizations to contribute any amount for providing children's books to young readers in low-income homes.

Flanagan said in a statement that: "Building a reading culture in every corner of this state will build a stronger Michigan for generations."

Flanagan said the effort will help Michigan attain a goal of having all children proficient in reading by the end of the third grade.

Gov. Rick Snyder answers questions about Flint's emergency manager, police, school deficits

Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder sat down with The Flint Journal Editorial Board and reporters while he was in town for a major General Motors announcement Monday, Dec. 16.

Question: What can we expect from the state budget?

Gov: Snyder will have an announcement in early February about the state's budget to explain more in detail.

"I wouldn't expect to see any major reductions," he said.

Question: 50 Michigan school districts ended 2012-2013 fiscal year in deficit. Flint has a $10 million deficit. What are the plans moving forward with addressing those deficits? Will there be a state takeover in Flint schools"?

Governor: "(A state takeover is) a very objective process. ... There are districts that come on and off that list. The goal here is as the economy continues improving we'll see that reduced.

One of the things we want to do is work with the school districts more on tools that help them do good financial management before they get into the environment of potentially even needing an emergency manager. I think one thing you can see is that we might try and get enhanced resources either in education or treasury or both to say how can they work with a better early warning system better management system to give feedback to district to solve these issues now."

Average Michigan teaching salary down over last 13 years after inflation

Brian Smith
The average salary for a public school teacher in Michigan has fallen by 8 percent when compared to salaries in 1999-2000, while the national average has fallen 1.5 percent over the same period.

The information comes from the U.S. Department of Education's National Center for Education Statistics, which tracked average teacher salaries across the country from as far back as the 1969-70 school year.

When converted to 2013 dollars, Michigan teachers were earning an average $67,148 in 1999-2000, compared to an actual average for 2012-2013 of $61,560.

The national average declined from $57,240 in 2013 dollars to $56,383 for the 2012-2013 school year, federal researchers said.

New York had the highest average salary at more than $75,000, while teachers in South Dakota were paid the least at $39.580.

The researcher who broke down the data, Jon Boeckenstedt of DePaul University in Chicago, has an interactive map on his website detailing the salary data.

Supporting Michigan's teachers and students

Sarah Lenhoff and Amber Arellano/Education Trust-Midwest in Royal Oak
Michigan's students have lost substantial ground over the last decade. Michigan has among the worst achievement gaps in the nation, and our state is not keeping up with the rest of the country – in achievement or improvement – according to new 2013 national assessment data. Indeed, that assessment found an astonishing 69 percent of Michigan's fourth graders cannot read on grade level.

Legislation being debated now in Lansing offers one possible solution to our state's tragically low performance: retain all third graders who are not proficient in reading and require them to repeat the grade.

An effort to boost early reading is noble – and needed. Students need to read proficiently in the fourth grade, when they begin to read to learn other subjects, such as math, science and social studies.

The question is: How do we do it to achieve the results that we want? We know from leading states around the country that a coherent, multifaceted strategy and investment are needed to meet the goal.

Florida is an important case in point. In 2002, Florida leaders passed legislation that would retain third graders who weren't proficient in reading, but they did so as they made investments and implemented a comprehensive strategy to improve learning. For example, by 2006, the state trained 56,000 teachers in research – based reading instruction in grades K-5. The state also placed retained students with high-performing teachers and built systems to identify those teachers, to ensure retained students actually got better teaching to help them catch up.

Florida also reprioritized around $80 million in state and federal funds to pay for this teacher training, plus reading diagnostic tests and summer literacy camps. Over time, it also has raised academic standards, installed a statewide educator support and evaluation system, and trained teachers on how to teach more rigorous, complex content.

Thankfully, Michigan is on track to implement two of the most proven, transformative strategies to raise achievement: the Common Core standards and an educator support and evaluation system. These new efforts are our state's best opportunity to raise not only third-grade reading levels but learning across grades.

We applaud the state leaders that have provided the leadership and commitment to see to it that Michigan implements these mutually reinforcing strategies. Now we encourage our state leaders to invest in this work.

Our new report highlights how Michigan can best do that over multiple years, given how budget-strapped the state is. It also provides a common-sense road map for implementing these strategies so that all teachers and students benefit, including in early grades.

Rigorous standards, aligned to the high-level skills required in college and in the 21st-century workplace, are new to Michigan teachers. They require dramatic shifts in instructional practices in the classroom. Teachers will need intensive support and training to meet them.

We also must commit to providing the training, data systems, and technical support that districts say they need to evaluate teachers accurately – and give educators the feedback and support they need to improve their practice.

Implementing these strategies first in the early grades makes good sense, and would build upon the preschool investment happening in Michigan. This strategy also would provide the proven, research-based support needed to raise third-grade proficiency rates.

Tennessee is among the states showing how these strategies, done right, can dramatically raise student learning. According to the new national assessment, Tennessee's students are seeing some of the highest growth nationwide.

That's remarkable, given how much Tennessee has struggled educationally in the past. How has Tennessee done it? It has invested in resources to train more than 35,000 educators and built an admirable teacher data, support and evaluation system to support educators on the higher standards.

The Michigan Department of Education is working to transform our teaching profession by raising the bar for teacher preparation programs and certification. While that is a worthwhile strategy, it's also a long-term one. Today's first-graders in Michigan will be in high school – or even raising children of their own – before such a strategy will pay dramatic dividends in learning. We need to improve both the preparation of future teachers and the practice of current teachers in Michigan's classrooms.

Now is the time to invest in our teachers – and ensure no Michigan teacher is left behind in the transition to tougher standards. In the coming weeks, we have an opportunity to begin making the investments and approve legislation that will put us on a responsible path toward educational improvement in our state.
